NON-PARTISAN TONE

Dean of St. Paul's on Militarism— Bishop of London Paints Peace Picture— One View of the Situation in Ireland

(Canadian Press)

London, Dec. 26.—The Christmas sermons, preached by prominent churchmen, were of an unwarlike tone. The doctrine of "Peace on Earth" seems to have suggested to them the advisability of talking of the subject of militarism, bloated armaments and the danger of civil war in Ireland. They all spoke of these subjects in a non-partisan manner.

Doctor Inge, dean of St. Paul's referring to militarism, said it was not a negation of the gospel of peace. "Modern Europeans," he said, are not war-like people. The true fighting man trusts to his own right arm to defend himself when the time comes. It is the old rich and timorous nations which guard themselves laboriously against enemies of which there is not a sign in Europe today.

"Europe is like a street of tradesmen who pay half their incomes for burglary insurance against each other. This is very absurd and very bad business, but there is nothing especially unchristian about it."

Doctor Inge said nations became large until they reached their final expansion and then disappeared, because neither the earth nor the air, nor the water could support them any longer. Then Would Be Peace.

The Bishop of London, Doctor Inge, pictured what peace there would be on earth if Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy and Spain were united by the single idea of learning from one another how best to serve God without a thought of jealousy or desire to increase their territory.

"The peace of nations would result in the peace of the classes," said the bishop. "There would be an agreement about the percentage of profit due to labor and what due to brains and capital. There would be peace between men and women who are now, to a certain extent, at war, owing to the fact that some of the women are embittered by the acquisition of knowledge about matters of which they were ignorant, and believe they are entitled to do all that good may come for them."

Very Rev. Hensley Henson, the Dean of Durham, preaches his Christmas sermon in Durham Cathedral, enlarged upon the possibilities of civil war in Ireland. Prefacing his remarks by a declaration that political preaching was the interests of national peace, and expressed the fear that, unless specific action were taken quickly, the nation might be confronted with a crowning calamity which might imply the empire's destruction, because if civil war broke out it would not be confined to Ulster, but would spread to the rest of the empire.

The dividing line would pass through the whole empire, and might reach foreign attack at the hour when the empire was least prepared to resist it.

Xmas Notes of Interest. Harrison, Ont., Dec. 26.—Not having heard for two months from their son, George, who is a sailor on the Great Lakes, Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Kett, had given up hope of seeing him again, fearing he had perished on that fateful Sunday, November 1, and had Christmas Day was in prospect at the annual reunion of the family.

The joy of the aged parents can be imagined when George, who had just been freed from his ship, came home on Wednesday night, and, entering the house, greeted them with a "Merry Christmas."

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 26.—A bounteous Christmas present was left at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Stupart, Victoria avenue, when the store paid a visit and left triplets—all boys. The mother and babies all are doing well.

Chicago, Dec. 26.—Christmas was observed in Chicago under cloudy skies and with an exceptionally mild temperature. Small patches of snow in the residential districts and suburbs were all that remained of the recent storm, as in most sections the ground had been washed by Wednesday's rain.

In two cases arising from family disputes the magistrate invoked the spirit of Christmas and arranged an amicable settlement.

BACK TO THE DOCKS

Dublin Transport Workers Say They Will Return—Larkin to States?

London, Dec. 26.—The fact that Jim Larkin, of "fiery cross" notoriety, is considering the idea of visiting the United States with a view of supplementing the funds of the Transport Workers' Union, looks as if he does not reckon on a continuance of English support, or that perhaps he would prefer to be independent of it and be in a position to pay for his own propaganda.

A large number of the Dublin transport workers, it is said, will return to work, strike or no strike, on Monday. Those with families are becoming dissatisfied with the condition of things and are anxious to resume work.

DEVILLIERS IS KILLED IN WEST

Man Who Married Boer Scout's Wife Shot Him

Los Angeles, Dec. 26.—A tragedy has been added to the romantic career of Mrs. De Villiers Glover, who was Miss Jean Campbell, daughter of H. G. Campbell, a wealthy Wall street broker, a noted beauty and former golf champion of New Jersey.

She saw her husband, Roy L. Glover, a wealthy land agent from San Antonio, Tex., shoot and kill Daniel de Villiers, a noted Boer war scout.

She was the cause of the tragedy, for she had been the wife of De Villiers, and he had come from Texas to try to win her love.

The Grovers came here two months ago—the husband, the wife and her two children by De Villiers. The former husband came here from Texas and went to the Glover residence, No. 2219 West 27th street.

Glover met him at the door. There were hot words and a fight. De Villiers drew his revolver, but before he could fire it, the San Antonio man had whipped out his gun and emptied five bullets into the Boer fighter.

Mrs. Glover saw it all. Glover is in the Los Angeles jail, charged with murder. She is busy planning his defense, and declares that the killing was proper and the right thing to do.

"De Villiers was a brute, I am a doctor and I advise you to do your own medical advice but nothing is done to follow up sickness cases and see that the wives and advice of the school doctors are followed. It is proposed to use the corps of nurses for this purpose. They will visit the homes of sick pupils and see that they are getting proper care and attention."

ROYAL XMAS WAS AN OLD TIME ONE

King and Queen and Family at Sandringham

O'LY ONE BOY ABSENT

Their Majesties Play Santa-Claus to Little Ones of Royal Household and Kindly Squire and Wife to the Tenants

(Canadian Press)

Sandringham, King, Dec. 26.—If in many sections of English life the old fashioned celebration of Christmas is fading into disuse, it is not because of royal example. It is the king's rigorous rule, as it was that of his grand-mother, Victoria the Good, and of his father, Edward the Peacemaker, to retire each Yuletide to York Cottage and, in the midst of his family circle, become the squire of Sandringham, forget the cares of state, and carry out all the old customs with the dignified simplicity of an English gentleman.

The only absence from the family circle this Christmas was Prince Albert, who is serving as a midshipman on H. M. S. Collingwood for a fortnight but there was no public sympathy with the strikers; indeed many citizens of all walks in life acted as strike-breakers, ran street cars, drove garbage carts and did other menial acts in order to defeat the strikers.

Meanwhile the royal nurseries witnessed pretty scenes. The Illusion of Santa Claus is still cherished, and the children still hang their stockings at the foot of their beds, the filling of which, it is said, is reserved for the king and queen in person. But experience having shown that even the largest stockings were not large enough, the house-keeper supplied the largest pillow cases available.

One condition of the celebration of Christmas which is rigorously insisted upon by the king and queen is its religious feature. The king's pipeer having awakened the older folks with a singing of the pipes from the lawn, breakfast was a prelude to a beautiful service in the church of St. Mary Magdalene, which had been decorated by Princesses Mary and Victoria. It was pleasant to note the healthy interchange of the season's greetings between the royal parties, from York Cottage and Sandringham House on the one side and the village folk and tenantry on the other as the congregation gathered for the simple bright choral service. The musical programme included Gounod's anthem, "Bethlehem," and the singing of the hymn, "Hark the Herald Angels Sing," and "O, Come All Ye Faithful."

The sermon was dispensed with as usual on Christmas morning, but there was a celebration of the Holy Communion. The rector of Sandringham, Rev. Roland Curran, administered the sacrament to King George, Queen Mary, Queen Alexandra and the other members of the royal family present who had passed the stage of confirmation.

The remainder of the day was spent in family fashion, the only ceremonial function being dinner eaten in the great dining hall of Sandringham House at "nine o'clock" though it was really only half past eight, the Queen Mother keeping up her husband's fashion of keeping the clocks half an hour fast.

The fare was traditionally English with the exception of a gigantic boar's head from the Emperor William and caviare from the Czar. The huge boar's head of Victorian days no longer appears, because it was found unwholesome, neither do the cygnets, King Edward's favorite dish, as there was roast beef and plum puddings and mince pie and Norfolk turkey. Queen Alexandra's Own Band played carols and choruses throughout the dinner.

CHINESE MASONS IN ACTION AGAINST CHIEF OF CALGARY POLICE Calgary, Alta., Dec. 24.—Because the chief of police of Calgary raised an alleged Chinese gambling den the other night and arrested several frequenters and the keeper of the place, a so-called lodge of Chinese Masons in this city has filed an action for $1,000 damages against the city and the chief.

They say they have suffered great indignity and humiliation as a result of the raid and that the acts of the chief and his constables were unlawful and wrongful.

The easiest way and the Right Way In the matter of pushing nationally advertised goods, Mr. Dealer, these two ways happen to be one and the same.

Naturally, it is easier to sell goods which the public already know through consistent advertising.

And it is right to push them because you are helping the public to get what it wants and you are showing intelligent co-operation.

When the national manufacturer comes into your daily newspapers like The Telegraph and Times, he is working for you. The least you can do is to show his goods, make window displays, and keep your selling force alive to the fact that you are pushing a good thing along.

The easiest way is the right way to increased sales and better service to the public.
