Le MARQUISE de FONTENOY

A Great German Statesman, The Strongest Man in the Nation—The Downfall of Sir Robert Peel—His Good Bye to Drayton Manor

Germany's strongest statesman today, the only one, indeed, that in his breadth of view and his masterfulness compares in any degree with the first Prince Bismarck, is not in Berlin, or in Germany, but in Constantinople, where he has filled the role of German ambassador ever since 1871, dominating not only the Sublime Porte, but also the entire diplomatic corps. He is Baron Adolf Marschall von Bieberstein, and prior to being sent to Stamboul was minister of foreign affairs at Berlin, and before that, minister of state to the Grandduke of Baden. At one time he was on very friendly terms with the late Emperor and Empress Frederick, and after his death, was looked upon as one of the widowed empress' champions. In fact, he is generally supposed to have been summoned to Berlin to assume the secretaryship of state for foreign affairs by the Kaiser, at the instance of the latter's mother.

A Pretty Row The experiment at Berlin was not altogether successful. The baron and the emperor did not get along well together; each of them was too masterful. The baron represented the Kaiser's constant interference, and the Kaiser, on the other hand, objected to the baron's independence of speech and of action. This soon became known at the court of Berlin, and a court cabal was formed, organized largely by the unsavory Prince Eulenberg, who succeeded in securing the services of Major von Tausch, the official responsible for the police protection of the emperor and of the court, and the head of the secret service. Tausch became involved in very serious trouble, was brought to trial, and during the course of the latter, the intrigues of Eulenberg and of certain high court officials, also the activity of Tausch himself against the baron were brought to light. Eulenberg, who is a man of the same huge build as Bismarck, and quite as choleric, completely lost his temper, and insisted on resigning. Nothing would induce him to stay on as minister of foreign affairs.

Subsequently he was pleased by the appointment as ambassador at Constantinople where he is left almost entirely free hand, and from whence he virtually directs Germany's policy in that part of the world. It was expected that at the time of the overthrow of Abdul Hamid that his over-ambition in Constantinople would wane. But he has known how to accommodate himself to the new regime, and is now very powerful in Constantinople than ever. He headed the German delegation at the last peace conference. He is not liked by the emperor, who cannot forget the bitter words that passed between them fifteen years ago, and even when the baron comes to Germany on leave of absence, or to consult with his government at Berlin, the emperor, who has loaded him with honours, avoids him in a rather pointed manner. The baron was originally chamberlain of the widowed Grandduchess of Baden, the only daughter of old Emperor William and his father occupied a similar position at the court of Carlruhe, where he was also chief justice of the grandduchy.

Once More Bankrupt Sir Robert Peel, who in January of last year was gazetted in London as a bankrupt, for the fifth time, has issued a statement to the people of Timworth and of the district, in which he announces that he has "come to the undesirable conclusion to sever my connection with Drayton Manor, and with my Drayton Manor estates and to part with them and the mansion house," and then goes on to express his profound grief at the severance of his relations with those to whom he had become so deeply attached since his accession to his title and estates. He also intimates that his action in the matter is due to the oppressive local legislation of the present government. This is ridiculous. Sir Robert Peel, who portrayed himself in a biography as "A Bit of a Fool," (which was the title of the work) is giving his estates, sold by his trustees, to a man to whom he had become so deeply attached since his accession to his title and estates. He also intimates that his action in the matter is due to the oppressive local legislation of the present government. Two weeks later he entertained Mr. Gladstone, who recorded in the visitor's book his delight at revisiting Drayton Manor after an interval of six years, and ten days after Mr. Gladstone's departure, young Sir Robert made his first appearance in the court of bankruptcy and from that time forth his personal connection with Drayton Manor has been virtually severed. Consequently it is foolish to talk of his sorrow at the sale of the property, or of the grief of the tenants at parting with him. He has not lived there for the last twenty years or more, save for a few weeks in 1866, and among his last tenants was his cousin, the Hon. William Peel, son and heir of Viscount Peel, and who married the only child of the multi-millionaire Lord Ashurst, the Indian king, after she had jilted Sir Robert. Sir Robert is the grandson of the famous premier of the Victorian reign, during whose time Drayton Manor, a magnificent mansion of the Elizabethan style of architecture, was visited by Queen Victoria, the Prince Consort, King Louis Philippe, and many other high-ranking personages. The manor was originally the residence of Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester. In 1390, it passed into the hands of the St. Marks, and afterwards into those of the Earl of Essex, a Cromwellian general. In 1700 it was purchased by a very wealthy cotton spinner, Robert Peel, father of the premier. The great Sir Robert's son, the third baronet, was secretary for Ireland in Lord Palmerston's second administration. Among the treasures of Drayton Manor, which are now about to be alienated, are a magnificent malachite casket, presented by Emperor Nicholas I. to Lady Emily Peel; the pistols which were to have been used by Sir Robert Peel, in his duel with O'Connell, the gold-mounted hoof of the horse "Emperor," which was ridden by the premier, Sir Robert Peel, when he was thrown and killed on Constitution Hill, in 1850; and full length portraits presented by Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort, on the occasion of their visit to Drayton Manor in 1846.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By BETH CAMERON

Do you ever worry? If you don't, you needn't read any farther. This isn't for you. But if you are ever afflicted with that disease, even hardly ever, I have a little medicine chest for you today. In it are thoughts for the worrier, supplied by some big mind doctors. Your prescription is to take the whole medicine chest now, and, if you are in a chronic case, every time you feel the attack coming on. Here's hoping they will help you:

"Don't worry about the future. The present is all thou hast. The future will soon be present. And the present will soon be past."

"There are just two things in life we shouldn't worry about—those we can help, and those we can't." Edward Everett Hale.

"Never put off until tomorrow what you can do today—except worry." Newton Newkirk.

"The worry cow would be here now, if she'd only saved her breath. But she thought her hay wouldn't last all day. So she choked herself to death." "For every evil under the sun There is a remedy, or there is none. If there is one, then try and find it; If there is none, then never mind it."

If, in the face of these arguments, you can still worry, it must be because you love it and I give you up. No doctor will treat a patient who doesn't care about getting well.

To Have a Clean Velvety Complexion

By MADAME D'VILLE

(From Chicago Inter-Ocean). Madame D'ville, one of Paris' most famous beauties just passing through Chicago, gives us a few valuable ideas on skin treatment as follows: "I have just come from beautiful Japan, where many of the Japanese women use a certain facial formula and ideas which American women should know. "What do they use to make their skin so soft and velvety? "Any American woman can use the same treatment if she desires. Dissolve one original package of mayonaise in the face, arms and neck with this solution once or twice a day, and you will shortly find you have a lovely, soft complexion, and then the best of it all is that this solution prevents the growth of hair and is absolutely harmless to the most delicate skin. Make the solution yourself. "Why, yes—of course I use it. Just see how beautifully soft my arms and face are, and not a hair. "No; you will never use powder again, and those stray hairs will soon be missing from your face."

The Fifth Baronet

The present Sir Robert is the fifth baronet, and has been mixed up in all sorts of unenviable scandals. His present social status is perhaps best shown by the fact that in the standard works of reference, his residence is described as "unfixed," while he has long since ceased to be a member of any London club. In the course of the bankruptcy proceedings last year, it was shown that his unfortunatè Baronesse, a former Baroness Mercedes von Graffenried, is dependent upon an allowance of about $4,000 by the trustees administering the Drayton Manor estates, and that the only son of this marriage, a thirteen year old boy, is not with his father, nor yet with his mother, but with Mr. and Mrs. Van der Heydt, who are the lad's guardians at law. Mrs. Van der Heydt is Sir Robert's sister, and if the Baronet has forfeited every bit of sympathy he might otherwise have retained in his troubles, it is because of his gross ingratitude to his brother-in-law and benefactor, Mr. Van der Heydt, who has repeatedly extricated him from trouble, and advanced money for his relief. The head of the Peel family, however, is not Sir Robert Peel, nor yet Viscount Peel, former speaker of the House of Commons, and a younger son of the great Sir Robert. Its chief is William Crompton Peel, of Peele Fold, in the county of Lancaster. The Peels became connected with that part of the county some three centuries ago, and the first Sir Robert Peel, who received his baronetcy in 1800, and who was the father of the statesman, was the third son of the then chief of the Peels of Peele Fold.

BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSIONS

At a meeting of the Baptist Foreign Mission Board yesterday afternoon letters were received from Dr. J. G. Brown, of Toronto, intimating that the Foreign Mission Board of Canada had just been incorporated at Ottawa. All that remains now to be done is the transfer of business by both the mission boards in Canada to the new board and this will probably be effected in October. The board appointed representatives to attend the district meetings in New Brunswick during June and also the association meetings in Nova Scotia and P. E. Island. In this work of visitation the missionaries who are now home on furlough will assist as well as members of the board. The missionaries who are available are: Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Glendinning, Rev. S. C. Freeman and wife, and Miss Flora Clark.
