tisfactory evidence in favor of any religion.

Failing this, any and all religions however venerable and pretentions, must retire before advancing civilization.

Churches and teachers of religion should be neither exalted above other trained and skilled professors, nor degraded below them; men should be no more ashamed to take a religious truth on trust, than they are to take a scienti truth on trust; to the mass of my fellow men the test of experiment is the only one which, from the nature of the case, they are able to apply. In short, prove the teachers, and hold fast the good.

—It is stated that the death of the Archduches Sophia of Austria, mother of the Emperor Francis Joseph and of Maximilian of Mexico, excites little regret in Austria. She was a woman of very harsh character, and it was at her threats and ancers that her sou, the Emperor, ordered the execution of the generals who had led the defeated revolution in Hungary: She had also an invincible aver-
