San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 10 .- In a partly disabled condition and with a crowd of nervous passengers aboard, the steamer City of Panama which sailed for Central American ports over a week ago returned to port to-day to repair the damage done by a storm off the coast of Southern California. The gale, according to an officer, was the swept out of her room by a wave that broke through a weakened bulkhead and was rescued on the deck by sailors. The vessel, which belongs to the Pacific Mail fleet and is an old-timer in the service, sailed from Ancon on September 29. The storm blew up on the night of October 3 and lasted 16 hours. A message for help was sent out by wireless, but by the time the revnue cutter McCulloch had responded from San Diego, the bad weather was over. Among the injuries reported were the loss of lifeboats, the crippling of the steering gear and the smashing in of the upper deck cabin. During the storm the passengers gathered in the saloon for prayers.
