New York, Jan. 14.—Today's cotton market was weak throughout, reflecting the break in the foreign spot markets with small sales on the decline and the rather general expectation that our southern spot markets would follow. There was a large volume of professional selling, and stop order liquidation and the south was also credited with hedge sales against spots. The weakness of the securities market doubtless augmented the solling movement. The market derived its chief support from shoft covering and moderate scale buying by spinning interests. The course of the spot markets will be watched with keen interest. If they do not respond to the break in futures, substantial rally would be in order.
