Boy Rescues Three Babies From A Well

*Carnegie Hero Medal Being Sought.
Displayed Daring and Bravery in a Praiseworthy Deed.*

Liberty, Miss., Nov. 26.—Bud Francis, 13 years old, has suddenly sprung into prominence as a result of his heroism in saving the lives of three babies. The little town of Robinson near here is acclaiming him as a hero of remarkable quick thought and action, lacking neither of which he could not have rescued the babies, and would have been killed himself.

Influential persons have called the attention of the Carnegie Commission to his case, as deserving a medal and a pension.

It all happened this way:

Three small babies, including a pair of twins, were playing on a platform covering a well, formerly used by a cotton gin, now abandoned. The boards over the well had rotted and the children fell through it being 40 feet to the water, which is six feet deep.

While other spectators screamed and wrung their hands, Bud leaped to an iron pipe in the center of the well, and slid downward so rapidly that his legs and arms were badly burred by friction. At the bottom of the well and extending a foot or so above the water, is a brick wall or ledge. Bud seized the babies one by one and set them upon this ledge, threatening them with dire punishment unless they hung on. Meanwhile a basket was lowered on a rope and Bud placed the babies in this and they were drawn to safety. On the second trip he slumped into the basket himself and was taken out.

It is considered remarkable that none of the babies were injured by the fall, either by striking the water or colliding with brick ledge, or falling on one another, but Bud is the only one injured, and his burns will speedily heal.

"It aint nothing," he exclaimed. "Them children sure had t be helped out of that well, and I helped them out, that's all."

A BROWN SKINNED GENIUS.

A young woman, dead all too soon, was buried in Harlem, New York, on Sunday and 150,000 people attended her funeral. She was Florence Mills, a Negro girl, who sang and danced and made people laugh. She was a genius of her race, daughter of some light-hearted brown woman who made African children laugh in the jungles of the dark continent.

Nobody can say just how much a genius is worth to a race. The spark that produces one such human being raises the self-respect of millions.—Call. San Francisco, Cal.
