London, April 5 .- Sir Robert Horne, the new chancellor of the exchequer, speaking in the House of Commons concerning the stoppage of coal mining, painted a gloomy picture of the results of the strike, declaring a stoppage of coal production at this time was far more serious than would ordinarily be the case. Nothing, the chancelor asserted, would be more pernicious for industry as a whole than to begin the granting of subsidies and further burden the aiready overburdened taxpayers. He voiced a plea for the opening of negotiations for a peaceful settlement without Involving subsidles.

John R. Clines, chairman of the parliamentary labor party, who followed the chancellor, spoke in a conciliatory tone. He appealed to the Government to mediate. The Government's action in giving up control of the coal mines, Mr. Clines asserted, was responsible for the rupture of the negotiations between the owners and the miners. He argued that it would have been better for the Government to retain control of the industry for two or three months.

Trustee Smith favored increasing the auditorium accommodation. Architect Carrothers declared that it would be difficult to do this without breaking the fire regulations or making radical changes in the design of the building. It was decided to leave the auditorium at the size originally planned, which will accommodate 750 persons. Trustee Smith urged that school concerts and other entertainments could held there, and that consequently these could be held more frequently than when they have to rent accommodation as at present. He thought it probable that some citizen might endow the school with a pipe organ.

Another suggestion to economize was that the stone facing at the rear of the building be omitted. The saving effected would be so slight that it was decided to retain it, as it will add mato the appearance of the

Great Brita, France and Italy Will Not Refuse to Consider Any Serious Proposal Regarding Methods of Reparations Payments, But Will Decline To Discuss Any Suggestion From German Officials as to Reductions From

· London, April 5 .- Although the British Government has not eceived in full from the British representatives in Berlin the note sent by the United States secretary of state to Berlin on the German reparations question, the official British opinion is, it was learned today, that Germany failed dismally in her attempt at a new method of solving the reparations problem—that of approaching the United States for assistance. British officials gather from the press reports that Secretary Hughes' note indicates a refusal by the United States to be a party to any German attempt to escape responsibility for the war and reparations payments. It is believed here that Germany's next move will be a direct approach to the allies. As to this, it is said in official quarters, no German proposal will be dismissed without serious consideration by Great Britain, France and Italy.

The German move, however, it is declared, must be a proposal regarding the method of reparations payments and not embodying proposals for a reduction from the total sum decided on by the Paris conference of the allies.
