THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1917

With contempt for all law and common sense the auto speeder continues in his mad career of catapulting the roadside ditches and throwing dust in the eyes of the public or otherwise making himself a common nuisance. The speeder should be made to desist his recklessness, and that right smartly. He is a menace to the safety of everybody else who travels on the highway.

What is a Bargain?

Nothing is a bargain unless you need it. It matters not how cheap the price of a thing may be, nine times out of ten the price is too high unless you have need of the thing. To buy a thing one does not need is poor business at any time, no matter how cheap he may get it.

Some people are always on the lookout for "bargains," and will buy anything which is offered to them at much less than its normal selling price, whether they have any use for it or not. In every neighborhood there is to be seen a rascal filled with old junk of all kinds, from a second-hand road cart to a broken-down threshing machine; things which were picked up at farm sales during the course of the years.

They have been bought with the idea of some day having use for them, or some time being able to sell them to someone else at a profit. More often than not they prove to be a source of loss, rather than profit, in the long run. Add to their original cost price the trouble of handling and storing them and the interest on the money invested in them, and the combination will almost always add up to a higher figure than what one gets for them when they are unloaded onto the other fellow. And often in the meantime the money one has tied up in them could much better have been put into something which was needed more than were they and which would have brought larger returns than do they.

Buying good, sound animals at less than their reasonably certain market value when one has the need necessary to care for them until such time as they can be sold at a profit on their original cost and the cost of feeding them in the meantime is an entirely different proposition. Such purchases can be handled so as to prove to be investments, but this can seldom be done with most other things. Remember the advice of the old man who said that "nothing was cheap that you did not need."—Maritime Farmer.

The auto driver who is careful to turn on his dimmers when meeting others on the road incurs more or less danger to himself, unless he drives very slowly or stops his machine entirely. While acting thus courteously he quite often gets a gentleman's "Thank you" for his pains, but it remained for a woman driving a buggy the other night to fling into his ear an uncalled-for and smart remark. Courtesy has its place on the public highway as well as in the drawing-room, and motor drivers are not the only ones who need to read the lesson.

CEMENT SEPULCHRES

N. Currie has purchased this season new steel moulds for making the non-leak vault. This cross-sectional view shows the construction in detail that affords a water-tight sealing of the cover. It will be noted that the cover is provided with a V-shaped tongue around the entire contact surface that fits into a groove in the body of the vault. This groove is made slightly deeper and wider than the V-shaped tongue on the cover, which would afford a little play until sealed. Before the cover of the vault is placed upon the same, this groove is partially filled with a specially prepared liquid cement. The one-piece cover is then inserted and pressed firmly down and it seals itself by its own weight and the pressure of the earth placed upon it, making a perfectly water-tight seal and in effect making the body and cover one solid piece of concrete heavily reinforced with steel, capable of standing all pressure of earth. These sepulchres are treated both inside and outside with water-proofing, making them damp-proof and giving absolute protection to casket and contents.
