

its consideration as valid for the whole universe. No one, I think, can survey the subject without being led to believe that behind it all there is a vast destiny, feebly indicated a purpose, inscrutable perhaps to our finite intelligence, but still a destiny, an end to which all things are proceeding.