We will mail the weekly issue of The Mail and Advocate to any address in Newfoundland or Canada from now until the end of 1915 for the small sum of Fifty Cents.

The weekly issue of The Mail and Advocate offers splendid opportunities to business men for advertising their goods as it is read by 50,000 persons every week.

The daily issue of The Mail and Advocate has the largest outport circulation by 100 per cent of any daily paper in the Colony. It has only been published nine months, yet its outport subscription list exceeds by 100 per cent the circulation of any other daily paper.

The weekly issue of The Mail and Advocate has subscriptions all over the Colony and is the cheapest weekly paper issued in the Colony. We give our advertisers good value for their money. They appreciate this fact and continue their patronage from year to year. Others should note this fact and advertise in the paper that is read by 50,000 persons.

For Sale! Motor Boat F.P.U.

Built for R. H. Silver, Esq., at their premises, Greenspond, in 1912. Used by President Coaker the last two summers during his cruises North.

Boat is fitted with a 27 h.p. Fraser Engine, which has given splendid satisfaction. The boat is 40 feet long and 9 feet wide, and would make an ideal mission boat.

She contains sleeping accommodation for four, and tanks for 250 gallons of fuel. Nineteenths of the fuel consumed by the engine is Kero oil.

The reason for selling is, the boat is not large enough for the purpose she is now used for.

The boat cost about $1800, and is well fitted in every respect. She is provided with sails. She would make a fine boat for collecting bait or for fishery uses. Apply to

W. F. Coaker.

BELGIAN ARMY SURGEON WAS HORRIFIED WITNESS OF EXECUTION OF WOUNDED

German Major Showed no Respect for the Red Cross and Intended Killing the Doctor Himself

GERMANS FINALLY LOST THEIR WAY

And Stumbled on the Allied Lines, Where Such of the Prisoners as had not been Murdered Were Set Free

In Flanders, Nov. 20. (By Mail to N. Y. Herald)—During a dark and stormy night a company of Germans succeeded in passing right through Dixmude after killing, and dead silence, the mitrailleuse guard at the head of the bridge leading to the town. The surgeon in charge of the field hospital was awakened by the sound of the Germans marching past.

In the room were two wounded men. He told them to keep quiet, as Germans were in the town, and then went to the staff to give information. He volunteered to bring up reserves, and set off in the pitch dark with his two wounded on a stretcher.

Stumbled on Germans. Walking along the dark road unsuspecting, he suddenly ran into the Germans, who were in the ditches and along the road. "Ha!" He thought these were Belgians, and joked, calling out to them for not seeing his Red Cross band, and replied to their challenge innocently, "Medecin Belge."

"Hands up," brutally enforced, brought him to his senses. He and his stretcher bearers were made to descend into the ditch, where they found other prisoners, fifteen in all.

Shot Wounded. Two wounded men were killed—the surgeon would have been shot also, only the officers interceded for him with the major. They had a wounded German officer with them and asked if he would tend him. He said "Yes," and tended the wounded German.

The major asked him if he knew any thing of the position of the troops, and he replied that he had been in hospital all day. Finally they advanced along the road, but it was soon evident that it was no good going any deeper into the Allies' lines. The Germans then boldly placed their wounded in a Belgian ambulance cart and sent it straight back to the town bridge.

Sorely Perplexed. One can imagine the surgeon's perplexity. Was the town wholly German? Otherwise it seemed too daring an act. The Germans decided to attempt to reach their own lines by a roundabout route. Over ditches, hedges, etc., they went straight ahead. Remarkable discipline was manifested. The men waded deep into water without a single word.

Over the roughest country went the daring band, prisoners in advance, without any sound having whispered words and stern orders.

The Germans lost their way as dawn was coming up, and they stumbled on the Belgian trenches. Rifles ran out, a German soldier fell. The surgeon rushed to help him, seeing also a way of escape, but "Vorwarts!"

came the order from the major, and the wounded man was left holding up supplicating hands after his comrades abandoned!

Passed a Battery.

The band had previously passed close behind a Belgian battery, the surgeon whispered to his fellow-prisoners not to call attention to it. The Germans might have done much damage, as there were no infantry near.

As it turned out the battery commander had trained two pieces loaded with shrapnel on the band and was about to fire when they passed on.

The Belgians remained in their trenches and the Germans pushed on, falling out of the frying pan into the fire, for the French troops were before them.

Made His Escape.

The surgeon seeing a chance in the disorder, lagged behind, and coming to a ditch, threw himself into it. One ambulance man and a French prisoner followed his example, and on all fours they crawled fifty yards and then witnessed the final phase of the adventure.

Finding themselves trapped the Germans commenced to kill their prisoners. Five were mercilessly shot, including a French marine officer and interpreter, who had been sent to them the previous day with a flag of truce to discuss some question. Another prisoner had been killed previously and was found later his legs bound with wire, and ten bullets in his breast.

Met His Fate.

The brutal major met his fate. A prisoner rushed toward the French, caught up a wounded man's rifle and charged back towards the Germans. He was within a yard of the major, bayonet ready to strike, when the latter saw him and turned, his sword still raised in command. The bayonet drove home; a gurgling shout of "Vorwarts!" came from the stricken officer, and all his brutalities had been paid for.

The French took the rest of the company prisoners and wanted to shoot them all. They would have been justified in doing so, but only the four were shot who had been marked out as the most brutal.

The Awful Scene

They met their fate in a very different manner from the major. One, a trumpeter, an elderly man, was frankly half made with terror. He held out supplicating arms and screamed about his family, his wife and children. His cries for mercy and shrieks of appeal were cut short by the sound of a volley from the firing party, obedient to the fall of the officer's sword, and the unfortunate wretch just shuddered into non-descript at the foot of the wall.

Another met death proudly, his head erect, his eyes defiant. He also shuddered down the wall into death. A third sprang to meet his fate with a cry of "Hoch!" for his Kaiser.

The fourth man had received every one of the bullets in the neck, showing excellent marksmanship. All the three refused to be blindfolded, and so in the morning glow they passed.

The Red Cross cart with the wounded German, which had attempted to pass back through the town and over the bridge was held up. "Halte la!" The guttural reply came: "Rouge Croix!" Down they all were brought and disarmed. The surgeon was able to put in a kindly word for those who had been good to him.

STEBAURMAN'S OINTMENT

St. John's, N.F.,
March 15th, 1914.

Mr. Stebaurman.
Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in informing you that I am perfectly cured of my stomach trouble after having used two bottles of your medicine. I feel as well as ever. I was fifteen years suffering. Doctors said they could do me no good and told me I would never be cured. I gave up hopes of getting better till a friend advised me to try your medicine, and after using two bottles I am well.

You are free to make any use of this that you think proper. I feel that I am completely cured and I trust that other sufferers will find the blessing of health again by using your medicine.

Yours truly,
MRS. STACEY.

RUTHLESS WAR ON OLD AND YOUNG

With and Without Pretext,
German Troops Burn and Slay Promiscuously

ONLY now, it would appear, are full personal details beginning to emerge concerning the ruthless war which the Germans waged upon old people, and upon women and children, in the days when, as they imagined, they were marching straight into Paris.

In a letter to her parents a lady who was amongst the sufferers at the hands of the Kaiser's troops describes how the invaders behaved as soon as they entered her village. At once, she says, the Germans began to set houses ablaze everywhere, on the absolutely groundless pretext that civilians had fired upon the troops. As it was impossible to escape by means of the street, which was full of soldiers, the lady, with her little daughter in her arms, took to the fields, accompanied by her aunt. They were just discussing whether it was safe to venture any farther when she was struck by a bullet and fell bleeding to the ground.

Though shell and rifle fire was playing heavily all round, the aunt declined to leave her and did her best to protect the child. But the old dame paid dearly for her devotion, because she in her turn was hit by more than one bullet, and eventually died at her niece's side.

After lying for hours the lady was picked up with other wounded people and taken to Luneville. Her house at Gerberville, she adds, has been completely burned down, and a few valuables which she brought away in a satchel when she took to the fields were stolen from her whilst she lay unconscious on the ground.

The Germans, she states, shot no fewer than eighty-six civilians in the town, men, women, and children, her father-in-law among the number.
