MODERN WARFARE.

With Rival Commanders Far From the Scene.

An excellent idea of what a modern land battle is like was obtained during the French army manoeuvres, when General Nicholas Chomer, commanding the 5000 men of the Southern army, did not see a regiment during the five days nor on the final day of the battle did he hear a gun.

The general's headquarters on the last day were in a pleasant wayside tavern, twenty-five miles behind the firing lines, which extended about the same length. A large scale map of the region was spread upon a table, a row of telephones like that in a New York broker's office was on a wall in the dining room, the tables of the field telegraphers were on the other side of the room, and wireless instruments crackled in an outbuilding. On the meadow adjoining military aerodromes arrived the departed, Adjutants taking the reports of the aviators.

There, Colonel of the staff, collected the telephone, telegraphic, and wireless reports, and the aviators' observations, together colored broad-headed pins on the map, thus indicating from moment to moment the relative positions of their own and the enemy's troops.

General Chomer studied the map attentively. Now and then he gave an order concerning the movement of his troops or discussed with his chief-of-staff the significance of the information just received.

General Paul Pau, commander-in-chief of the rival Northern army, under whom the same circumstances, sat some fifty miles away, sending his orders and dispatches into action, with no more of the tumult of war than is heard during a chess match.

ON THE BORDERLAND OF DEATH.

Suspended animation, that shadow hovering close to the healers of men; the dread thing that has darkened history and given to fiction some of its most moving masterworks; the ever elusive, terribly deceptive stage between life and death, has taken on a new aspect in the laboratories of the Johns Hopkins Medical School, in Baltimore, says Charles F. Oberster in August Technical World Magazine. Recent experiments in the physiological, histological, and biological departments have produced astounding results. Such creatures as frogs, rats, and reptiles have been frozen in liquid air in a temperature under one hundred degrees below zero; have been stored away in tubs, and in some instances, subjected to operations. Months later they have been resuscitated, and like the good children in the fairy books, have lived happily ever afterward.

The results which have been worked out by the Johns Hopkins school have been amazing, and so far as they have gone, they are practically conclusive. Considering the short time in which the tests have been conducted, they offer something for any thinking man to ponder over.

The important point is the preservation of living tissues. This has been proved possible beyond the shadow of question. Tails of rats have been sliced off and placed in refrigerating jars for weeks. When taken out, they have been grafted on to other rats, whose extremities have just been amputated, and the once frozen tails have grown just as fast as if they, too, had just been cut off.

However these men may shake their heads and scoff when the human relation to these researches is brought out, it must be apparent that this is the first genuine approach science has made to producing latent life at will. Producing suspended animation, although in a low form, has been made as practical a certainty as mixing a chemical formula. It can be studied and analyzed now.

Certainly, humanity has something to look to from that.

Little for Doctors to Do.

After reading the speeches and the papers at the Medical congress, one gets the impression that the outlook for the medical profession is gloomily painted, says London Truth. One deadly disease after another has been tackled, and overthrown. Discoveries follow discoveries, each more brilliant than the last and fraught with greater benefit to mankind. It takes a whole week of reading and talking to describe the wonderful things that doctors have been doing in all parts of the world, moving within the last 12 months. Obviously, there must soon be no more worlds to conquer. Every one will have been cured, and no more doctors will be wanted. It is pathetic to see the crowded ranks of the new generation of Bab Sayers, and to reflect that in a few years their occupation will be gone.

Would it not be well if somebody were to get up a congress of patients? It is just possible that they might then hear another side of these astonishing scientific achievements. As a matter of fact, every congress of medical men has the same strain; but disease has continued to exist, doctors have continued to multiply, and the one thing that is perfectly certain is, each generation produces its new knowledge, and the preceding generation knew nothing at all. In order to get at the real value of all the achievements that we have heard about during the past week, we must wait until the next international congress is held in London.

The Housekeeper

Never use use rubber bands when putting away jewelry or table silver, because quite a good deal of the metals contain more or less alloy, which will tarnish, and as sulphur exists to a large extent in rubber it is obvious rubber bands will be destructive.

To clean black silk sponge with strong, cold tea, into which a little hartshorn has been put, and then iron on the wrong side with a fairly hot iron.

A tincupful of vinegar set at the back of the range and kept boiling while cabbage, onions, etc., are in cooking will prevent the smell from them getting through the house.

Wash and dry flannels as quickly as possible, if you wish to keep them soft and white. Ended blue hair ribbons may be freshened by allowing them to stand in strong blue water a few minutes after being washed and ironed with a warm iron.

Biliousness

is certainly one of the most disagreeable ailments which flesh is heir to. Coated tongue—bitter taste in the mouth—nausea—dizziness—these combine to make life a burden. The cause is a disordered liver—the cure Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills. They go straight to the root of the trouble, and the liver right, cleanse the stomach and bowels, clear the tongue and take away the bitter taste from the mouth. Prize Hen Fruit This.

An enthusiastic description of hens' eggs in South Manchuria is sent to the Department of Commerce by Consul Williamson, of Antung. They are the largest hens' eggs on earth, he says. "It may be of interest to breeders and egg farmers in the United States to know," he states, "that I have seen eggs weighing over four and one-half ounces produced by an ordinary hen of no particular breed, fed on corn and kept in an enclosure. The few referred to is a black hen resembling a Langshan. She lays an egg weighing four ounces or over at least every third day, and lays an egg every day for about a week or ten days, when there occurs an interval of two or three days in which no eggs are laid. The smaller eggs average six to the pound. The shell is brown, with a circle of dark spots near one end."

Salesmen and Smiles.

"The smile is one of the greatest assets of the successful salesman or saleswoman," says the manager of a department store linen department. "It makes friends for the store as readily as do moderate prices and good goods. The ability to smile for eight hours a day is a trait hard to acquire, and possessed by few store help. Yet it can be gained by constant practice—the watering of oneself and not permitting at any time the slightest indication of a frown."

"I recall my first purchase in a New York department store. I was directed to the counter where I could find the special article of my choice. I was met by a gruff 'What is it?' from the salesman. I recall I said, 'Nothing, and I haven't been in that store since.'—New York Press.

The Cheerful Woovers.

The story of the Scotchman who took his lassie to the churchyard to see the family graves and asked, "How would ye like to lie there yerse'f some day, Jennie?" is well known. Here is a companion yarn.

A shopkeeper in a village near Glasgow took his bride on a tour in the South of France. She died; he married again; and by way of honeymoon trip contented himself with a day's sail around Bute. Let a widower for the second time, he is no more sought consolation, and this time the marriage knot extended no further than the village kirkyard, where he drew his bride's attention to the tombstone that had decreed to the memory of his deceased wife. It bore the words—"Ye also ready."

Good Advice.

Some time ago an Irishman presented himself before a judge to seek advice. "Now," he said, "I kape hens in my cellar, but the wather pipes is burst, an' my hens is all drowned."

"Sorry I can't do anything for you," said the judge. "You had better apply to the wather company."

A few days later Pat again appeared. "Well, what now? What did the wather company tell you?" queried the judge.

"They tould me, yer honor," was the reply, "to kape ducks."

Finds Was Keeps.

William M. Woods, the head of the woolen industry, said in Boston, apropos of the new tariff:

"It listens good, as the slang phrase goes, but will it listen good to the very end? Won't the end be a dismal surprise, like the tale of the lost cat?"

"A country minister, driving to church with his new overcoat on the seat beside him, lost the coat en route, and announced its loss from the pulpit."

"'Dearlly beloved,' he said, 'I met with a sad loss this morning. Somewhere on the River road, while driving to church, I lost my fine, new, silk-lined overcoat. If any of you find it I hope you'll bring it to the parsonage.'"

"'It's found, doctor,' said a voice from the back of the church."

"'Bless you, my friend! Heaven bless you!' said the minister, beaming on the speaker gratefully."

"'It's not,' continued the voice. 'I came along the River road just after you, and it wasn't there.'—Boston Post.

WHEN BABY CRIES

Do not get out of patience or scold or shake your baby for crying. He does not do that to be ugly—that is not a baby's nature—he wants to laugh and be happy, but when he cries that is the way he takes of telling you he is in pain; that his little stomach is out of order or that his new teeth hurt him. Insed of being cross give him a dose of Baby's Own Tablets, and you will soon see him laughing and happy again. The Tablets sweeten the stomach; make teething painless; break up colds; cure constipation and expel worms. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Motors in the Tropics.

A motor used in tropical climates is apt to develop defects which do not appear under other conditions, for the reason that it is subjected to high temperatures and a great deal of moisture. It has been found that the absorbent insulation used in the slots in stators is responsible for a good deal of trouble. Where this weakness has developed the motors have been rewound with mica insulation and this has cured the trouble. A similar condition of affairs might result even in temperate zones, where the motor is situated in a damp place subject to high temperatures. In such positions it is advisable to use a non-absorbent slot insulation.

Marimony and a Motto.

Among the presents lately showered upon a dusky bride in a rural section of Virginia was one that was the gift of an old woman with whom both bride and groom were great favorites.

Some time ago, it appears, the old woman accumulated a supply of cardboard mottoes, which she had worked and had framed as occasion arose.

So it appeared that in a combination of insight and good sense, suspended by a cord of oranges, there hung over the table whereon the other presents were displayed for the delectation of the wedding guests this motto: "Fight on; fight ever."—Lippincott's.

FOR MARRIED MEN.

(Montreal Herald) A Toronto clergyman having suggested that all married men should be compelled to wear wedding rings, the Vancouver Province and points out that nothing would prevent the flirtatiously inclined from removing the tell-tale claret when so inclined. How would it be to have small neat rings carefully inscribed in one ear?

TO WASH REAL LACE

How a Delicate Task Can be Done Satisfactorily.

Wind the lace around a bottle which is the same width top and bottom and cover it entirely with muslin fastened to the lace by a few stitches. Fill the bottle half full of sand, so that it may not get knocked about too violently when the water boils.

Immerse the bottle in a saucepan of cold water with a piece of soap the size of a nut in it, and if the lace be very dirty, a small pinch of salt; then let it boil for about an hour, pouring off the water as it gets dirty and adding clean water.

If stained or greasy, it should be left to soak for some hours or even days in good olive oil before washing. This restores to the thread that softness and smoothness which use and bad washing had impaired. After the oil bath it should be washed on a bottle in the manner already described.

Bird's Nest in Lamp Case.

In the lamp case of a staff-catcher at Llangollen station a blue tit mouse has built its nest and hatched and reared a brood of seven. The only means of entering and leaving the lamp case was through a hole at the top, no larger than a penny. A lamp, which had not been lighted during the spring, remained in the case, and the nest was built upon it. Not only did numerous trains pass daily within a foot or two of the place, says the "Great Western Railway Magazine," but every time a train-staff is taken from the staff-stacking lamp case is given a sudden shaking accompanied by a loud clanging noise.

Just Before I Go to Sleep.

Just before I go to sleep,
Like a flame across the sward
Silently the fancies creep,
Golden fancies, gem bestar'd
Just before I go to sleep.

Just before I go to sleep,
All the brightest flower bloom,
And the heart itself must weep,
Such the music fills the room—
Just before I go to sleep.

Just before I go to sleep,
Comes a fear these shining things
Into nothingness may leap.

Ere a dream can spread its wings—
Just before I go to sleep,
—Antoniette de Courcy Patterson in London Poetry Review.

THE CHILDREN'S CHUM.

(Belleville Ontario)

Happy is the man who can relegate all business cares to oblivion and become a child in the happy hour which fathers occasionally give to playing and romping with the children.

Not a great many men are built that way, but it is a real gift to those who are. Wholesale abandonment of self to become a child again in thought and manner, outliving the fatherly into the games of the youngsters and give them a time they remember for a life time, is something that makes man young again, and it is the brain all the more active when business cares are resumed.

Watching such a man the other day I envied him. There was being created a community of feeling between parent and children which brought us a close together in the happiest of bonds. I can now, to last a lifetime, the "happy hour" that "except we become as one of these" etc., and truly more innocent pleasure could not be imagined. It is a great thing occasionally to go away from the big things of life.

"LADY" AND "WOMAN."

(Rochester Post-Express)

The truth is that the word "lady" to distinguish a well-bred woman is nearly outworn. There are many reasons for this. One is that many noble, tender and beautiful associations cling around the idea of womanhood than about the conventional and pretentious conception of ladyhood. To be "thoroughly womanly" is a greater thing than to be "perfectly ladylike."

You can't always tell. Many a man is tall physically, but mighty short mentally.
