COUNTY COURT CASES

The case of Williamson vs. Glasser ame before Judge Bell in the County Court this morning. This case was adjourned from last Thursday, and since that time the plaintiff's (David Williamson) evidence was taken ce bene esse. The parties came together this morning and a compromise was arrived at. The action was for $262.22 and interest since the 4th of March, and interest since the 4th of March, 1902. By the compromise effected the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff $150, each party to pay their own tosts. Houston & Co. for the plaintiff, and J. G. Kerr for the defendant.

An appeal also came up in the case of Robertson vs the Chatham Dredg-This was an appeal by the defendant on the taxation of costs, the main point being as to the allow-ance of witness fees. Witnesses from Wallaceburg were subpoenaed for and paid by the plaintiff on the 6th of June, and on the same day the case was settled and the witnesses notified did not appear in court. The abjection was, that the money paid to these witnesses could not be taxed against the defendant and that the plaintiff must go to the witnesses and recover the money he paid them.

The Judge sustained the objection and reserved judgment on a number of minor points which came up. Geo. A. Sayer for the plaintiff, and J. G. Kerr for the defendant.

HARCOURTS BAD BILL

'How is it," asked Thomas Scullard this morning, "that when the Collecess at Marlborough House.

In the following year the Prince was present on several occasions when his mother made public appearances, greatly to the gratification of her people. In March, 1882, a man shot at her Malesty as she was driving away from windsor railway station; but fortunately the Queen suffered mothing worse than a shock. The fellow was said that we did enough. At the end Harcourt should step in and compel where he has been visiting his did that we did enough. At the end city and county pupils are charged fees, the city pupils being charged 60c and the county pupils $1 per month.

These fees are fixed by the county council and the city. The Collegiate Institute collects this dollar per month from each county pupil, and then credits up the amount to the county council when settling with them. For the past three years the cost per pupil was about $43. According to Harcourt's new law, the county can only be called on to pay 80 per cent of the that the city will cost of pupils, so have to pay one-fifth of the cost of county pupils, amounting to over $8 per pupil. Why the city should pay this $8 per pupil I don't know.

BIG THING

H. A. Daniels-by the way, Mr, Danehls claims his initials don't stand for Hot Air-advance representative for the big Forepaugh and Sells Bros.' circus which shows here on the 19th, is in the city to-day making preparations for the great event.

He says he's all struck on the town and the surrounding district.

"You're enterprising," he declared, when chatting for a few moments with the press, "we circus people know it, and we swing about sixty miles out out of our regular route, to take it in.
"What about the circus? Well it's the biggest and best ever! And don't think it's any mistake. The show is now at its best and the myriad 'attractions billed are the finest money and brains can secure. "But don't take my word for it, concluded Mr. Daniels, it for yourselves."

"LEWIS CARROLL"

How the Prince of Wales Appreciated the

There is a very interesting account of the Queen's visit to Oxford when her eldest son was staying thire. "Lewis Carroll," who lived it Carlst Church, thus mentions the affair in his diary; "Visit of the Queen to Oxford, to the "Visit of the Queen to Oxford, to the great surprise of everybody, as it had been kept a secret up to the time. She acrived in Christ Church about twelve, and came into Hall with the Dean, where the collections were still going on, about a dozen then being still in the Hall. The party consisted of the Queen, Prince Albert, Princess Aice and her intended husband, the Prince of Hesse-Darmstadt, the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, and suite. They remained a minute or two looking at Visit of the Queen to Oxford, to the remained a minute or two looking at the pictures, and the Sub-Dean was presented. He arrived about nine, and I found an opportunity of reminding General Bruce of his promise to introduce me to the Prince, which he did at the next break of conversation. to the Prince, which he did at the next break of conversation. His Royal Highness was talking with Mrs. Fel-lowes. He shook hands very graci-ously, and I began with a sort of apology for having been so importunate about the photograph (referring to "Lewis Carroll's" attempt to photo the Prince on his first arrival at Christ Church.) He said something about the weather being against it, and I aske i if the Americans had victimized him much as a sitter. He said they had, but he did not think they had succeeded well; and I told him of the new American process of taking twelve thousand photographs in an hour: Edith Liddell coming up at the moment, I remarked on the beautiful tableaux which the children might make. He assented, and also said, in answer to my question, that he had seen and admired my photographs of them. I then said that I hoped, as I had missed the photograph, he would at least give me his autograph in my album, which he promised to do. Thinking I had better bring the talk to an end, I con-cluded by saying that, if he would like copies of any of my photographs, I should feel honoured by his accepting them. He thanked me for this, and then I drew back, as he did not seem inclined to pursue the conversation." inclined to pursue the conversation."
A few days afterwards the Prince of Wates gave his autograph, and also a dozen or so of "Lewis Carroll's"

The city and county pupils are charged May the Queen dedicated Epping For-est for the use of the public forever, being accompanied by the Prince. Later in the year she declared the new law courts open, and again the Prince was at her side during the function. There is no doubt that the Prince did his utis no doubt that the Prince did his ut-most to persuade his mother to come out more frequently from the retire-ment which had become her second na-ture; for he was well aware how her presence in the metropolis gave a neces-sary spur to West End trade and added life to London. At the same time he sary spur to West End trade and added life to London. At the same time he was discharging more and more the duties which ordinarily belong to the Sovereign, although he was always careful to say that he did so "on behalf of my Mother." The publication in 1883 of More Leaves from my Journal in the Highlands did more to prove in 1883 of More Leaves from my jour-nal in the Highlands did more to prove the affectionate bonds with which the members of our Royal Family were linked than all the formal speeches in public could have accomplished. The public could have accomplished. The natural way in which the Queen wrote of "Bertie" and "Alix" in these interof "Bertie" and "Alix" in these interesting revelations of her home-life went to the heart of the nation in a very genuine fashion. The language in which Royalty is written of is ordin-arily so stiff and formal that these affectionate allusions of the Queen to her son and his fair consort seemed to take us into her confidence and to row aside the veil of formality and remonial which ordinarily divides a nonarch from the people.

Assassination of the Czar.

The year 1879 was one of considerable gloom in England, for bad harvests and great depression of trade were added to the continued war which had already entailed much distress. Political restlessness followed, and in 1880 came the extraordinary turn of the tide which landed Mr. Gladstone in power with a large majority behind him. With the advent of a new Government, it seemed as though things took a turn for the better, and the commercial outlook was certainly brighter. Queen Victoria's grandson—now the German Emperor—the eldest son of the Crown Princess of Prussia, was married in 1881, and the event was of special interest to his Bitt. The year 1879 was one of considerable Prussia, was married in 1881, and the event was of special interest to his B it ish relatives. But soon after the wedding bells had rung came the terrible news of the assassination of the Czar Alexander I. on March 15th, 1881. The Prince- and Princess, as has been mentioned, were old friends of the Emperor and the tidings made a very deep impression on them. The shock was all the greater because the sister of the Princess was the wife of the ruler who now came to the throne of the Russian Empire. Besides, all such events affect every member of all the Royal families, for they cannot but feel how precarious their own life is. The Princess of Wales was much depressed by the shock which she received, and it was some time before she could get over it. That summer the family gathering in Denmark was shadowed by the constant thought of the death of one who had always enjoyed so keenly his release from police supervision and the sense of freedom which was so impossible in Russia. The Czar said once to the daughters of the Prince: "Goodbye, my dears, you are going back to your happy English home: I am going back to my Russian prison." event was of special interest to his Bit.

GRANDEURS OF PEAK AND CHASM

The natural attractions of Colorado are by no means confined to her mineral springs resorts, her splendid parks, nor to her beautiful mountain lakes. In whatever direction the traveller may choose by rail, if he go to the mountains, his journey is a succession of glorious scenery, varying in the characteristics of placid beauty grotesque ruggedness, an awe-inspir-ing grandeur. Up the canons, by heavy grades and difficult curves, are us walls rising perpendicustupendous walls rising perpendicularly or gradually sloping back toward the hills, and yet again leaning forward above the chasm, as if threatening to come tumbling down, projecting rocks that hang suspended over the train as it glides smoothly by it is a panorama of wonders and grandeurs, such as belong only to the Rocky Mountains.
