The Little While Here.

Don't be always borrowing trouble,
Don't be always looking blue;
Don't be always trying to finish
When the race is but half through.
When there's a bit of sunshine—
Let the bleak past disappear.
Now's the time to enjoy sunshine—
The little while we're here.

Don't see faults in other fellows—
They are work the same as you,
Pick out good in many dealings,
Every man don't get his due.
We must take whatever's sent us,
Though the sky ain't always clear.
Still there's bright clouds if we seek them,
The little while we're here.

Don't think that we hoard you fortune
Through your wishes, waits or prayers;
Every duty requires an effort,
If you'd climb Fame's golden stairs.
Act them, when the hatter's over,
. . . .

The little while we're here.

The Heart That Found Itself.

Five years had gone since his wife had left him for the land where all burdens are laid aside, and the thoughts of the weary are no longer sad. Out in the world he had wandered, seeking a place that had not come to him, hoping for a forgetfulness of the selfishness of life. Now once more he is back among old scenes and possessions, unsettled in mind, despised of men, the abhorred of all.

Eight years agone he had won the love of a sweet little one, who knew not of his cruelty, and gave no heed to tales of his unreasonableness. Help after help had left him, unable to bear the constant abuse and ever finding of fault. Dollars after dollars had gone to loss because of his short-sightedness. Rumors of all manners had been spread afar of his life, and yet he was successful in winning the heart of the best and most religious girl of the town. While the mania of the uncertainty of getting her was upon him, he was gentle and peaceable; when the little hand was laid in his for its eternal keeping, his moments of return to happiness and right were swept afar, and no wave brought them again up on the shore.

Early and late his wife was compelled to toil. Cows to milk, the stock to feed, a host of men at times to provide with meals. Greasing of wagons and dragging in of wood were added month by month upon her. Then where the awakening came that she was bound unto a low beast, her light-heartedness departed, her lamp of hope went out.

Outside there was desolation indeed. In that awful torrent of wind and wave brooks became foaming cataracts, gorged with ice, mud and cattle. Hills were torn apart, while giant rocks that had perched for centuries upon mountain-top, were removed and thrown afar upon the plain. Not a particle of the home stead of this being was left, even the foundation was torn asunder and buried beneath the earth.

After considerable delay the bodies were lain within their graves, while the voice of the unfortunate man came strange and fearful with his judgment of God; the judgment of God." The existence and power of an actual God had been sacred into the hearts of all, and men no longer believed that the prophets spake in visions when they related the realities of the Creator's work. Men who for years had never entered a church were hereafter found there whenever possible, while the story of the time when the hills were swept away and rivers ran to dry places was spread afar and woven into the tales of other ones.

That night he left the village. No one saw him depart. Like a star astray he went into the darkness, and was lost for a time. Four years later he returned, builded a home upon the old site, erected barns, gathered cattle, did all his work in silence, and provoked none. A deep gloom was upon him, while the spirit of his departed family kept him constant company, to whom he continually talked. Late in March there came a night charged with snow that blinded and destroyed. It piled up great drifts across the country and well-nigh buried the homes of its inhabitants. It pressed down the tree branches and snapped them everywhere. It lifted the river level with its banks, and bewildered the seamen afar at sea. He could find no rest, and went forth into the grasp of the snow fiend. All day the housekeeper waited for him; that night she kept watch for his return. The snow fell furiously, and no communication with other houses could be made. Three days raged the storm, and then calmed down like a sleeping child, while the north wind blew bitterly and all the air was clear. She signalled all that morn for help and none came until long past midnight. When her story had been twice told they knew all hopes of locating him were delayed until the warm rains had cleansed the land, and men suspected he had gone unto the graveyard, there to lie down among the lives he might have served.

There came an even when a pleasant rain fell upon the earth, filling the brooks beyond their boundaries, and carrying trace upon trace of ice and snow away. In the morn the ground was bare, and by one impulse went men and women to the resting-places of the forms that here were bruised and slain. With his face to the sky, lay the desolate man upon the grave of his wife and a hand stretched across upon each little mound. Carefully the frozen form was gathered and borne homeward, while the bell tolled wearily the age.

A beautiful day of rest came o'er the village, it was the funeral day of him who had sought a resting place 'neath the shadow of the church. From twenty miles came families to attend the morning service and to wait until the burial was ended. That service was largely of a memorial kind, with hymns and prayers for the dead, with special Bible readings, and a sermon that went down deep into the hearts of all. Little brooks, fresh from lately melted snows, played wondrously along the road and in to wood and field. The earth was full of the resurrection, and human hearts were touched with the same eternal chord.

From the same spot where five years before were borne the bodies of his wife and child, amid a myriad convulsions of nature that burnt facts deep into the souls of men, was carried the form of him who had stood as a relic of the old damp scraper days. . . .

There are those who declare that moments do come when the forms of all are seen—husband and wife walking among the graves, each carrying a little child, and all trace of hatred gone. To some it is given to know more of the unknown land, to see the forms that do exist around us. Day by day we come nearer to a complete solution of the whole mystery, and shall know as we are known.

The Split-Log Drag.

HOW TO MAKE AND USE IT.

The two halves of a split log, ten or twelve inches thick, are set on edge thirty inches apart, both flat sides to the front. The cross pieces are wedged to two-inch auger holes bored through the slabs. In other respects the cut is self explanatory. If working a clay or gumbo road, it is advised to put iron (old wagon tire, or something of that sort) on lower edge of drag at end of six months; for softer soil, at end of twelve months.

The inventor has prepared the following road-dragging 'catechism', telling how to make and work the drag.

Would it not be better to plow the road before dragging?

No. Plowing gives a soft foundation. Plowing the middle of the road is a relic of the old damp scraper days.

What do you do when there are deep ruts in the road?

Drag them. If you drag when the surface is quite loose and soft, you will be surprised how soon the ruts will disappear.

How do you get the dirt to the middle of the road?

By hauling the drag slantwise with the end that is toward the centre of the road a little to the rear of the other end.

But suppose the road is too narrow?

First drag the wheel tracks. After three or four rains or wet spells, plow a shallow furrow just outside the dragged part. Spread this over the road with a drag. Only plow one furrow. You may plow another furrow after the next rain. At each plowing you widen the roadbed two feet.

How many horses do you use?

Two, generally; three if it is just as handy; four when breaking colts—a good solid team in the centre, and a colt on each side; two men on the drag, one to drive, the other to control the colts.

How do you drain the road?

If the earth is pushed in the middle of the road continually, the road will drain itself.

Why not make the drag out of plank?

You can, and do good work, but the split log is the best. The plank drag is not so stiff.

Why not make the drag of heavy, sawed timber?

Because drags so made have a tendency to slip over the bumps.

Don't you grade up the road first?

No. The grading is done with the drag, gradually. By so doing, the road is solid all the time, and is built on a solid foundation.

What does it cost to drag a mile of road a year?

The coat is variously estimated at from one to three dollars.

How do you keep the road free from dodging around sidewise?

By not loading it too heavily. If a drag dodges around the earth you are moving, it is because it is overloaded.

Will the dragged road stand heavy hauling?

Yes and no. A dragged road will stand more heavy hauling than an undragged road, but not so much as a macadamized or well-kept gravel road.

Don't drive too fast. Don't walk; get on the drag and ride. Don't be particular about material; almost any log will do. Don't try to drag with one piece; try two.

Can be Banished by the Rich, Red Blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Actually Make.

The health and happiness of growing girls and women of mature years depends upon the blood supply. There is a crisis in the life of every woman when there are distressing headaches and backaches; when life seems a burden and when some women seem threatened with even the loss of their reason. It is at this period that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills prove a blessing to women. Every dose increases the richness and the redness of the blood supply, and this new blood strengthens the organs, enables them to do their work properly, banishes the headaches and backaches and dizziness and secret pains that have made life a burden. There are thousands and thousands of growing girls and women in Canada who owe their health and happiness to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mrs. James McDonald, of Sugar Camp, Ont., is one of these. She says: 'I was badly run down, felt very weak and had no appetite. I suffered from headaches and backaches and a feeling of weakness. I could scarcely drag myself about and felt that my condition was growing worse. I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and got a dozen boxes, but before they were all used I had fully regained my health and was able to do my housework without the least fatigue. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been a great blessing to me.'

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People from any medicine dealer or by mail from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50. If you are weak or ailing give these pills a fair trial—they will not disappoint you.

Ever Have Cramps?

Kind of fierce to be tied up in a knot at midnight with cramps. Keep Nerviline handy. Ten drops quiets cramps instantly. Used occasionally Nerviline prevents this trouble entirely. From Stratford, Ont., Wm. Dee writes; 'Nothing I know of will give such quick relief in cramps, colic or pain in the stomach as Nerviline. If you feel squeamish or sick, just ten drops of Nerviline in water and you're well next minute. Think of the protection and comfort contained in a 25c. bottle of Nerviline, and get it to-day.
