Perhaps there is after all no more crime.

THE renewal of negotiations at Washington for a settlement of the fisheries question has brought to light some stories connected with the treaty which the U.S. Senate refused to ratify some two years ago. It is alleged that Sir Charles Tupper declined to sign that treaty until after he had urged by cable by the Imperial government to do so. Mr. Chamberlain, who was the British commissioner, is reported to have said that England did not regard the Fisheries as at all a vital matter and certainly would never think of going to war about them.
