The Sentinel Light of the Blessed Sacrament.

By Wm Thornton Parker, M. D.

Before the church's open door The busy throng all heedless pour, Thoughtless of Sanctuary light, Unconscious of its message bright.

Aching Joints

In the fingers, toes, arms, and other parts of the body, are joints that are inflamed and swollen by rheumatism...

Sufferers dread to move, especially after sitting or lying long, and their condition is commonly worse in wet weather.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Remove the cause of rheumatism—no outward application can take it.

King and Beggar in Week of Piety.

The blessing of the palms and the ensuing processions date back to the earliest days of the Christian era; and in Italy there is one family which has for hundreds of years enjoyed the strange monopoly of furnishing all the palms used for the purpose by the churches and basilicas in Rome.

The Custom of Having Thirteen instead of twelve poor men to represent the apostles on this occasion dates from the reign of Gregory the Great.

According to sacred legend and popular tradition, one Holy Thursday, when Gregory the Great was engaged in washing the feet of the twelve poor men whom he always assembled on that day at a bountiful spread table, he suddenly found a thirteenth before him, on whose feet were the stigmata of the wounds of the cross, and who had mysteriously vanished before the kneeling pontiff, completely overcome by the sight, had risen to his feet.

Soon after Isabella II. came to the throne

Good Friday came round. The court was assembled in the palace chapel. The time for the adoration of the cross had come.

The young queen knelt before the crucifix the salver with three papers was presented, and all watched for her majesty to touch one and to repeat the traditional words, "May God pardon me as I pardon thee." But, with tears in her eyes and a heart full of pity, regardless of tradition, she stretched forth both her hands, brought all three papers together, and in broken voice exclaimed, "Yo os perdono a todos yasi Dios me perdone!" ("May God pardon me as I pardon you all.")

In England the custom of washing the feet on Holy or Maundy Thursday was retained until the close of the reign of King James II., the last Roman Catholic sovereign of Great Britain.

At the Vienna Hofburg the venerable emperor, in spite of his advanced age, never fails on Holy Thursday to perform in person the ceremony of washing the feet of twelve poor men, who, arrayed in new clothes furnished by him for the occasion, sit in a line on a raised dais.

After a brief religious ceremony, the monarch kneels before each one in turn, and pours on to the extended foot some tepid rose scented water from a golden ewer, which is carried by him by the cardinal archbishop of Vienna, while the senior archduke present bears the golden basin.

Another high dignitary extends to him the embroidered towel with which he dries each foot.

When the foot washing is complete and the men have resumed their footwear, they take their place at a bountiful spread table, where they are awaited by the emperor and the archdukes and afterwards sent to their respective homes in court carriages, each furnished with a well filled purse and a large basket containing dishes prepared by the imperial chef and wines from the imperial cellar.

At Madrid Don Alfonso, if sufficiently recovered from his severe attack of influenza, will undertake the same ceremony, but it is a question whether the young queen in her present delicate condition of health will be able to undergo the fatigue of going through the performance of washing the feet of her poor woman.

Perhaps she may insist upon it, just because the republicans, and especially the Carlist foes of her husband's dynasty, have endeavored to create popular doubts as to the sincerity of her conversion to the Roman Catholic Church.

It is a duty that it expected of the queen of Spain whenever she is well enough on Holy Thursday to perform it.

The aspect of Madrid, and in fact of all other Spanish cities during Holy week is of a nature which carries one back to the middle ages.

From Thursday evening until Sunday morning no carriage, cart, tram-car, or omnibus is allowed in the streets.

All the sentinels and troops when on duty have crepe on their swords hilts, and epaulettes. Women of all classes are dressed in sable hues and wear the national mantilla.

Music and the sound of bells is forbidden during the whole of the week.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday a strict fast is observed from one end of the country to the other, and during these three days more than 2,000 men dressed in long white linen robes and white linen veils pierced with three holes for the mouth and eyes thrown over their faces, patrol the streets of Madrid and Seville, carrying crosses and lighted wax tapers in their hands, and chanting psalms.

On Good Friday, in accordance with pious tradition, the minister of justice submits for the king's signature the free full pardons of three prisoners lying under sentence of death.

This ancient custom, which has been in use in Spain since the fifteenth century, dates back to Mosaic times.

The Hebrews were in the habit of releasing a prisoner at the Passover in remembrance of their deliverance from Egypt, the popular choice at the time of the crucifixion lying between Christ and the Barabbas.

Their "most Catholic majesties," for that is the correct title of the rulers of Spain, adopted a similar custom for the celebration of Good Friday. Until the reign of Isabella II only one sentence was remitted.

Several papers, however, were prepared and folded, each one containing the name of a condemned prisoner.

These were placed promiscuously in a large silver salver, and that criminal was reprieved on whose paper the royal hand rested, the others obtaining no benefit.

The anxiety of all those whose names were given is for this purpose and the bitter disappointment of the unsuccessful may be better imagined than described.
