"With me? Oh, nothing. But there's some news of one of our clients that'll interest you—and you, too, Mrs Warden."

It was here, then, in this little town, that, in the days of its modest prosperity, and before those of its vain ambition, "the doctor," as he was called by the neighbors, or Mr. Warden, as they should have called him, was sitting with his young wife in the parier of his newly-furnished brick house, which stood in the outskirts of the town, and had a sort of prescriptive right to be the house of the doctor for the time being. He was a young man who had not long since come from Redchester, and had paid money for his practice in Denethorp. It was upon the strength of that practice that he had taken a wife.

Young as he was—he could not well be more than thirty—the most unskilled observer could not have taken him for anything but a country doctor of a well-known but not of the highest type. He was tall and robust, but inclined to fatness, with a red, full face that told of much exposure to wind and weather, and with a little of that undefinable look about him that belongs to a man who spends a great deal of his time on horseand with a little of that undefinable look about him that belongs to a man who spends a great deal of his time on horseback as part of his regular day's work. His hands were large and red, but well trimmed and cared for; and his expression—which was by nature that of a good-humored, easy-going fellow, who would complacently take the good and ill of life, whichever might happen to turn up, without making any particular effort to secure the one or to avoid the other—had already acquired something of that unmistakable sort of artificial gravity that is peculiar to and inseparof that unmistakable sort of artificial gravity that is peculiar to and inseparable from the profession of medicine. Women of his own rank of life, which was obviously not very high, who regarded only his number of inches, his curling brown hair, his blue eyes, his white teeth and his round and jolly voice were unanimous in thinking the white teeth and his round and jolly voice, were unanimous in thinking the new doctor a handsome man, and doubtless, his plain, quiet-looking wife, the daughter of a druggist in Redchester, had been of that opinion also. With the men of the place, too, he got on famously. They set him down as a good fellow, and considered him an acquisition to the of tradesmen that met nightly be the bar at the King's Head. Thus what with his personal and social advantages, his youth did not tell much against his professional prospects. Indeed, for that matter, when he first came to Denethorp, its inhabitants had to exercise Hobson's choice in the selection of their physician. Patients had either to go to "the doctor" or else to doctor themselves; and it soon became an understood thing that people must avoid being taken suddenly ill when the hounds met within the reach of a man who kept but one horse. but one horse.

On the whole, it was thought by her friends that Mrs. Warden had done very well indeed for herself and her family in marrying the doctor at Denethorp. It is true that when she and her husband had become well settled down, she found that she had to spend a good many solitary hours: but that she took as a matter of course. To spend his evenings among his acquaintances, settling the affairs of the world, the nation and the town, until he had drunk more punch than was oute good for him, was, according to her experience, only a necessary phenomenon of the masculine nature. Her father had always done the same; so had her brothers; so had every same; so had her brothers; so had every tradesman and professional man in her native place; and, had her experience been very much wider than it was she would have found much the same state of affairs everywhere throughout the kingdom. It was, at all events, a symp-tom of the time, of which she never complained or dreamed of complaining. But on this particular evening it was far too cold to tempt the doctor to turn far too cold to tempt the doctor to furn out unnecessarily, even to go as far as the King's Head. So he contented himself with drawing his chair well up to the fire, placing his blg feet on the brightly polished fender, mixing himself a stuff tumbler of hot grog, and so preparing to enjoy a domestic evening with his wife, who was devoting to needlework all the attention that she could spare from the baby.

It must not, however, be supposed that the hour was by any means late. The doctor used to begin his evening as soon as he had dined, supposing that his patients had not kept him from home; and the church clock had struck no more than four when he took the first sip from his glass. By the time that he had taken a second, a horn was heard, of which the well-known sound announced the arrival of the coach from Redchester.

of which the well-known sound announced the arrival of the coach from Redchester.

"Poor devils of outsiders!" said the doctor. "They must be frozen to each other's sides. Well, thank the Lord, I'm not likely to be wanted tonight."

"I say, Lorry," he said, after a pause of some ten minutes, "this frost is a confounded shame. I meant to have had at least two days, But that's always the way when the meet's hard by and one has just a bit of spare time."

Just then the clock struck the guarter, and as this is the whole of the conversation that passed between them in the space of fifteen minutes, it may be fairly space of fifteen minutes, it may be fairly assumed that the doctor belonged to that numerous class who are by no means so sociable at home as they are when abroad

But he was not fated to lose his even-ing's gossip, after all. The clock had not had time to chime another quarier when a knock at the door announced the ar-rival, cold as the evening was. of a rival, cold as the evening was, or a young man of about the same age as the doctor, but of a smarter and sharper Hamilton Re-Elected.

Two Labor Candidates Were Successful at Ottawa.

A Number of Candidates Returned by Acclamation—The Results in Various Parts of the Country.

Following are the results of Monday's elections in the larger cities and in Western Ontario municipalities:

TORONTO. Toronto-The expected happened today when Mayor Howland defeated W. F. Maclean, M.P., in the mayoralty contest by a majority of 4,652. The majority, however, was considerably less than was anticipated. The vote was 13,424 for Howland, 8,775 for Maclean, and 633 for Woodley, the Socialden."

"And what's that?"

"Old Clare's coming back."

"What!—to Earl's Dene?"

"Yes—and Miss with him."

"Then there'll be some fine doings this winter, I suppose?"

"Hm! The old gentleman's coming to be quiet, he says; and Miss must have changed from what she was if we get The total vote, 22,832 was considerably below the average, as it was 24,944 in 1901, and 26,347 in 1900. This ows that there was a good deal of apathy among the electors. Mayor Howland, speaking after the polls be quiet, he says; and Miss must have changed from what she was if we get any fine doings out of her."
"What was she, then?"
"She wasn't down here much, you know. But she was very odd—deuced odd, in fact; and I don't think she and the old gentleman used to pull too well together." closed, said the decisive victory over Mr. Maclean would show the people of Canada that the great city of Toronto wished its affairs conducted on busi-ness principles, and did not take Mr. Maclean's promises of things he could together."

The victory of two labor candidates today's municipal elections were a feature of the results. Three labor candidates were in the field, and the two successful men were elected in the leading wards-Central and Wellington. Ross, editor of the Journal, polled the largest vote ever given an alderman in Ottawa. The race cry in "And Miss Clare?"
"Miss Anne? She talked—didn't she talk! The bishop was scared out of his seven senses, and the old gentleman got to look like a lobster—and no wonder."
"And what did she talk about?"
"Lord knows what she didn't! But she made out everything to be shams—Crown, and Lords, and Parliament, and law and all; and as to the Constitution the two French wards resulted in the return of three French candidates in each of these wards. table. It is the voters of this realm who have given

TILLSON'S PAN-DRIED OATS

the proud place they occupy to-day. They only maintain their premier position by their high and unvarying grade.

Women voters vote for "TILLSON'S" because they can be proud of the porridge they make.
