A FUTURE GOLDFIELD

A remarkably interesting article on British Guiana, written by Charles F. Clark, appears in the Engineering and Mining Journal of November 7th. He first discusses the boundary line between Venezuela and British Guiana, and frankly states that the Venezuelan side of that line has no future, not because it is not as rich, but because Spanish American government makes industrial advancement hopeless. He goes on to state that British Guiana affords good openings to prospectors with $2,500 capital. Colonial mining laws, taxation and fees are fair on the whole and moderate. He goes on to say:

"I am variously asked 'whether the colonial government gives mining rights and privileges to native and alien alike?' 'Are the very small number of whites as compared to the entire population able to live safely in the interior?' as well as other questions which can only be answered by the personal experience of the enquirers. Concerning the first question: The British Guiana government, as representing the colonial policy of Great Britain the world over, gives absolutely equal property rights to native and alien miners, and equal protection to the life, health and person of every inhabitant within its borders. In sickness and destitution, the public hospitals and established channels of assistance are gratuitously open to all without distinction of nationality or color. To my mind, here is the explanation of the success which the British government, above all others, achieves in making its colonies generally prosperous and their inhabitants loyal. John Bull makes no attempt to turn a native or an alien into a Britisher. He secures their loyalty or support in quite another way by respecting local laws, habits, customs, wherever he finds them, giving to the humblest toiler and the richest magnate equal rights, and impartially inflicting prompt punishment upon all wrong-doers. On the face of it this is ideal philanthropy; as a matter of fact it is true policy. Great Britain places her main reliance on the possession of land. What is land good for without workers? By what means can those workers be made loyal and earn the most money for the treasury? Take British Columbia, which at the present rate of American settlement seems soon to become Yankee Columbia. Has John Bull been caught in any trap, or is his territory in danger? Not in the slightest degree. That astute old gentleman quietly smiles as he sees Americans "piling in" there with money and machinery to develop his mines, hew his forests, build his railroads and cultivate his fields. In one sense, the property becomes theirs; yes, but under his laws and his government. All he seeks in return is official revenue and the fair conduct and support of the inhabitants."

This is a noble panegyric from the pen of a keen-sighted citizen of the United States. Granted that he overlooks the fact that John Bull, in an insular sense, has nothing to do with the policy of Canada toward aliens. But what justice he does to the spirit which has made the British Empire, of which Canada is no mean part! And who or where are these unworthy citizens who would reverse and annul the far-seeing and dignified policy to which is due our Imperial greatness?

A VISIT TO THE VICTORY-TRIUMPH.

A party of Rosslanders visited the Victory and Triumph on Saturday in very stormy weather, but when they saw the showing there was no blizzard in North America that could chill their enthusiasm. One of the finest exhibits of copper croppings ever seen is now on view in THE REVIEW office from the big ledge on the Triumph.

The promoters of the Victory-Triumph company have already within a fortnight had the claims surveyed and application made for a crown grant, cut out a good trail, and put up commodious winter buildings. Before this week is out they will have begun to lay in supplies for the winter and by the beginning of December development work will have begun in earnest.

PRECIOUS METALS IN COLORADO.

Since 1893 Colorado's gold production has doubled, from $7,400,000 in 1893 to $13,700,000 in 1895, while her silver output has halved, declining from about $22,500,000 to $11,700,000.
