

A New Course For Canada

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney has made it very clear to people at home and around the world that Canada has embarked upon a new course of action, with a new attitude to the world.

That attitude is reflected in the words and actions of Prime Minister Mulroney and the Progressive Conservative Government since assuming power after the national election of September 4, 1984.

On the domestic front, the new course of action consists of strengthening the economy, removing obstacles to growth, ensuring government fiscal responsibility, improving the social safety net and developing a consultative approach to problem-solving.

Internationally, Canada's new course of action consists of meeting her international commitments, developing international trade, promoting international peace and meeting the moral obligation for international aid and development assistance.

"My government is committed to building Canada's image in the world...as a free, tolerant and independent nation; as a reliable trading partner; as a good place to invest and do business; as a people committed to the entrepreneurial spirit; and as a nation that honours its commitments to its allies."

Prime Minister Mulroney

