American History for Grammar Schools

By MARGUERITE STOCKTON DICKSON

A GRADED ONE-VOLUME HISTORY

THE MOST COMPREHENSIVE SCHOOL HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

Beginning with those events of the middle ages that led up to the discoveries of the New World and ending with the administration of President Taft.

It presents in proper relation "those features of ancient and mediæval life that explain either important elements of our civilization or that show how the movement for discovery and colonization originated."

It describes the whole life of the people, not merely the military and political activities of the nation.

The arts of peace, the social and economic features of our history receive foremost consideration.

It is not sectional, but treats fairly and impartially all parts of the country.

"No North, No South, No East, No West — One Country."

It is the first graded one-volume history. It recognizes the inevitable growth in capacity of children as they pass through the grammar school. Hence it is increasingly mature in thought and style from the first chapter to the last.
