NOBODY TOUCHED FOWLER POOR FOSTER HADN'T "DATA."

Montreal, March 27 .- (Special.)-Th Star this evening editorially says: As was anticipated, the stomach parliament has proven to be stronger than its conscience. It has swallowed an insult, and succeeded fairly in looking as if it liked it. The ministers are willing to lie under an omnibus imputation of immoral private lives. They would rather carry this suspicion than face an investigation. The opposition "front bench" doubts the consistency of the prime minister in now maintaining that there is nothing On the motion to go into supply R.

But he kept clear of Mr. Fowler. Yet Fowler was surely implicated in the Foster land deal. But poor Mr. Foster has neglected to gather any wideta' about the private lives of any "data" abou t the private lives of the ministers. He will only talk back when assailed—he will not explode. The editorial savagely arraigns Mr.

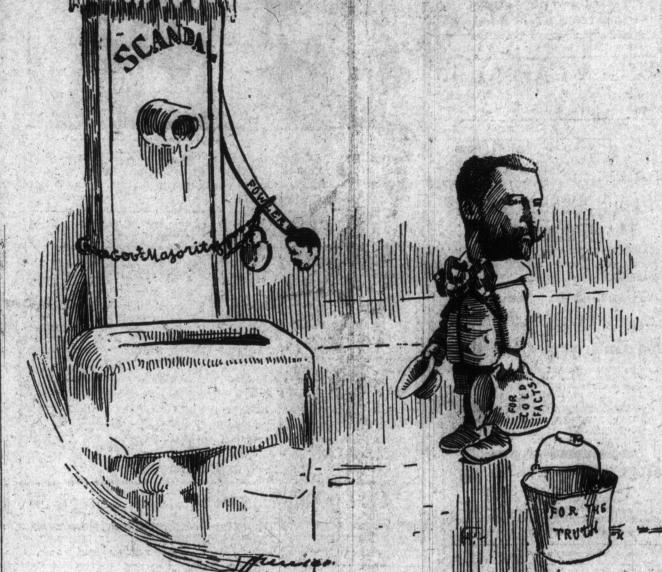

Fowler, and concludes as follows: Meantime the government goes on record s declaring that the private life of a minister may be what he chooses so long as he keeps out of the police court, and no one will make charges against him in the house of commons. The opposition goes on record as declaring that one of its members can make the foulest insinuations against other members of the house, and leave them in the air, without calling down upon himself even the reproaches of his leaders. If they were willing to benent by the immunity which his threats seem to have secured for himself at all events, they could not have acted differently.
As for the country, it has yet to say whether it desires its men in high places to be men of clean lives and inspiring examples to the young, or if it be content to see its ministers sit silent under grave insinuations of personal misconduct, leave undisturbed in his seat the man who made the insinuations, tacitly my fellow-citizens get treated in the same way. I started work on a farm of 200 acres, with a young Canadian, at $11 per month. I agreed when he hired me to go for a month, and after that, if I liked it, I should stop with him for seven or eight months.

"Well, the first night I arrived at his house in Ontario (a few mfles west of Toronto) I was shown to the room where I was to sleep. The furniture consisted of an old couch with boards nailed across, and two dirty rugs and a pillow and a broken chair. It was quite winter time, and I was so cold at night that I had to sleep with my clothes on and a traveling rug that I had with me for the first week. I was allowed to lay in my comfortable bed until 5.45 a. m., when I had to get up and do the chores and be in to breakfast by 7 a. m., which consisted of a plate of porridge and a plate of fat pork and dried potatoes and a cup of tea.

odd jobs that he could find up so as to keep me going until 8.30 and 9 p.m.

"We started seeding after about 10 days, and I had to be up at 5 o'clock sharp. One morning I came down at 5.15 and he told me I had lost the best part of the day. We used to be working in the field at 6.30 a. m. until 6 p. m. excepting about eight minutes for mealtimes. When the horses were resting he would find me some other work. I never had one minute to myself (excepting Sunday, when I had the afternoon).

"I put up with this treatment for five weeks, and told him I did not like it well enough to stop. So I asked him to look out for somebody else. He got angry and told me if I wanted to leave him I could do so then at that minute, and he said he would not pay me a cent. So I left next morning. I had to get up early, pack my things and drive back for my luggage and drive to the station, take the rig back and catch the 9 o'clock train for Toronto, not having had a cent for five weeks, bard work amd bad treatment.
