STAMBOUL.

(Rev. George Scott.) In Ispahan ere yet the daylight died Methought an Inaun from the dinnies cried Into the shadows where the Bulbuls hid. See how the centuries have rolled along, And sultan after sultan with his state Have ruled in Stamboul of the Golden Gate Ann passed like memory of a wanton song. Vanished forever from the keen delight Of flowers and stars and singing birds and trees Sinking forever from men's memories As sinks the day into the lap of night. And still they prated of their right divine And still they dallied with their golden dowers And watched and waited only that the hours Should bring again the dance and ruby wine. They dreamed that youth forever would be young The precious attar from the rose distill And poppy drops enthral the wayward will To the love ditties by the slave girls sung. And Vazier after Vazier fanned their pride, Bowing obsequial to the ivory throns As though depended on their will alone The span of time the universe would wide. They had their day, but now that day is passed, And heedless sultans with their lawless hordes, Living forever by the right of swords, Into the scales of justice have been cast. Last year heavy laden caravan Passed through the gates of Ispahan the fair With jingling bells that smoke upon the air And all that joyous store so dear to man. But now on earth there lingers not a trace Of all that brilliant passing equipage, Not in the mind of youth or hoary age Lives there a tincture of its lovely grace. No more the ivory halls of Ispahan Shall lend their echoes to the Sultan's call, No more shall echo to the soft footfall Of slaves who lived and shivered 'neath his rule. Alas! the Damned and all his cursed line Abhorred of man shall wander from their place Into the silence of the outer space, And in their stead shall kindlier justice shine. For mark how each succeeding century brings To men who chafe in cruel slavery's chains Lasting surcease from their corrodng pains And life and hope and feasts of better things. In Ispahan ere yet the daylight died, Methought an Inaun from the shadows cried Into the dinnies where the Bulbuls hid.

SIR ARTHUR CURRIE

HAS NO INTENTION OF GOING INTO POLITICS

His Views on the Position of the Canadian Soldiers on Return

With the Canadian Corps, Dec. 9, via London, Dec. 10—(By J. F. B. Livesey, correspondent of the Canadian Press.) Some Canadian newspapers to hand speculate as to the part Sir Arthur Currie may play in the future political life of Canada. It may be stated with authority that nothing is further from the mind of the commander of the Canadian corps than entry into politics after the war is he bound by political affiliations nor is he bound by political affiliations on any particular party. As a private citizen he will cast his vote with consideration only for the men and measures before the electorate. He deprecated suggestions that returning soldiers will be exploited as an independent political force with which old parties will have to reckon, and believes that they will return to their citizenship and take up again their political duties in the same spirit of devotion to the best interests of Canada as has characterized their work in the field. Whether the individual soldier prefers to do this through one or another political party it is for himself to decide. They return with characters strengthened and ideals elevated by the ordeal of the last four years, and these qualities should
