Patient Kills Famous Surgeon

Revenge For Ills Ascribed To Operation

Useful Career Ended

Mourning By Thousands of Poor
Whom He Treated Free As Well As in Aristocratic and Artistic Circles

According to Milton V. Snyder, London correspondent of the New York Sun, the assassination of Dr. Pozzi in Paris has ended the useful life of one of the most illustrious of French surgeons and perhaps the one most widely known in England and the United States. He was the victim of a man upon whom he had performed an operation for a cerebral lesion, but whom he was unable to cure. This man, owing to increased sufferings and mental disturbance, was obsessed with the idea that the famous surgeon was responsible for his condition, and in his delirious state resolved to avenge himself upon the scientist who had done him the most harm. Dr. Pozzi had a wide acquaintance in Paris, where he is mourned by thousands of poor women whom he treated in the hospitals and by thousands more in aristocratic and artistic circles, where he was a welcome friend. In the course of his long professional life he had been a surgeon in the hospitals, a professor of the Paris Faculty of Medicine, and had made many innovations in surgery, especially with regard to the diseases of women.

Like a Venetian Doge.
He had created model wards for the diseases of women at the Broca Hospital, where he was surgeon-in-chief for thirty years. He was seventy-one years old and had almost ceased operating. His art demands the vigorous hands and the clear sight of the man who has not yet passed maturity. But he always continued to take a passionate interest in everything pertaining to his profession. It was he who, as the result of a journey to the United States, made known in France the splendid discoveries made by Dr. Carrel in his New York laboratory, discoveries which found a fruitful application in the treatment of war wounds. In his youth Pozzi was a splendid, handsome man, and despite the years, he had aged very little outwardly. An admirable portrait of him by Sargent is in existence. In it he is pictured draped in his red robe of professor of the Faculty of Medicine—the professors of the four faculties, literature, law, medicine and science, are the only ones in France who have preserved the pomp of this costume. Pozzi kept this air of a Doge of Venice with which he went through life. The great preoccupation of this illustrious surgeon, to whom no honor was lacking, was to live as a gentleman. He was a magnificent horseman, and in the salica d'armes a fencer of the first order. He would lay down the lance to make up the poet's pen; last year, in the Revue de Paris, might have been seen two sonnets by him, sonnets which had real merit, revealing nothing of the amateur. He was a real lover of the arts, and had the operating theatres of his hospitals decorated by artists of talent. He bought their pictures. He also bought the antique that brought him one day into conflict with Anatole France in an amusing way. The latter, in the course of his travels in

LEMON JUICE TAKES OFF TAN

Girls! Make bleaching lotion
if skin is sunburned,
tanned or freckled

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle, sunburn and tan lotion, and complexion beautifier, at very, very small cost. Your grocer has the lemons and any drug store or toilet counter will supply three ounces of Orchard White for a few cents. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day and see how freckles, sunburn, windburns and tan disappear and how clear, soft and white the skin becomes. Yes! It is harmless.

Turkey, had discovered in the shop of a Jewish merchant a Grecian statue of a good period. "I cannot take it with me," he said to the dealer, "but if you should come to Paris on business, fetch it with you and I'll buy it."

Some time later the Syrian Jew made the voyage with the statue, only, instead of taking it to Anatolia, France, he knocked at Pozzi's door. "I thought," said he indignantly, "that a great surgeon must make more money than a novelist and that you would pay me no mistake. He was not mistaken; Pozzi bought the statue. Anatole France bore him a grudge for a few days only, and later on the pair of them laughed over the incident. But above all, Dr. Pozzi was infinitely gracious toward women. Sometimes this graciousness was a trifle surgical. To a lady who said to him one day, "Oh, doctor, how nice you are to us," he replied, "I do what I can. I can boast that, of all the surgeons who have ever operated on women, I am the one who has left the smallest scars; I am too great an admirer of their beauty to wish to destroy it."

A Long and Pleasant Life.
Mr. Snyder recalls an occasion when he dined with Dr. Pozzi with a distinguished company, among whom was another eminent doctor, a specialist upon diet. He passed his life saying "Don't eat that, ladies; whatever you do, do not drink that." "I don't understand him," murmured Pozzi. "From my youth up I have always said to myself that if I could not have an agreeable life and a long one I'd rather have the agreeable one. And you see that has not prevented me from having a long one too."

And while he drank his Burgundy and ate trifles with the appetite of a young man, says the writer, I admired his majestic and almost youthful face. The modesty of a patient and short life expectancy for he ought to have lived long years yet. He was honored with a military funeral in virtue of his rank as Surgeon-General. The religious service was celebrated at the Protestant Church, Avenue de la Grande Armée. The President of the Republic was present, as well as M. Clemenceau, who was a personal friend of Professor Pozzi.

A serious accident occurred in the vicinity of the Marsh bridge last evening, when a horse driven by Allen Selfridge, a local barber, took fright at a street car at Kane's corner, ran away and threw all occupants out of the carriage, including Mr. Selfridge, Mrs. Walters, his mother-in-law, and Mrs. Leonard, friend of the latter. Mrs. Leonard sustained serious injury, was badly shaken up and her condition caused considerable anxiety at the General Public Hospital last evening where she was taken in the ambulance.

PETROLEUM WAR SERVICE BOARD URGES GREAT USE OF MOTORS

Instead of curtailing the use of motor vehicles, as has been necessary in England and France to conserve gasoline for military uses, car and truck owners here are being urged to use their vehicles to the fullest extent for the relief of passenger, freight and express traffic on the railroad in the United States and Canada, according to the Petroleum War Service Committee of the Council of National Defense.

The gasoline situation, which threatened last summer to result in a short economy, due to conscription of gasoline for military uses, car and truck owners here are being urged to use their vehicles to the fullest extent for the relief of passenger, freight and express traffic on the railroad in the United States and Canada, according to the Petroleum War Service Committee of the Council of National Defense.

As gasoline cannot be stored in large quantities because of lack of storage facilities and inability to build additional storage tanks at this time, and as it is impossible to ship more gasoline abroad than is now being forwarded to Europe, it is evident that in the present coal shortage, and railroad congestion every effort should be made to utilize motor trucks and passenger automobiles for hauling merchandise and carrying passengers on utilitarian errands.

The gasoline situation in this country is not to be compared with that in Europe. England and France are almost entirely dependent upon imports of petroleum products, and the inability to import is limited by lack of ships. It is for this reason that the use of motor cars for private use has to be suspended except for the most urgent requirements. America, on the contrary, is the world's largest oil-producing country and is unable to export more than one-quarter of its gasoline production. To the extent that gasoline, kerosene and fuel oil are used for power purposes, the supply of coal is conserved—New York Times.

As approximately thirty-two every thirty-three gallons of gasoline consumed in Canada are imported from the States, either as crude petroleum or as refined gasoline, it is abundantly manifest that the recommendations of the Petroleum War Service Commission at St. John, N. B., should be applied as such to Canada as to the States—J. A. Fagley & Company, 42 Prince street.

Captain Roosevelt Sees Son First Time

Surgeons at Bronx Hospital Decide Wound Will Not Be Affected by
Visit to Oyster Bay

Oyster Bay, L. I., Sept. 8.—Captain Archibald B. Roosevelt, first of the four sons of Colonel Roosevelt to be wounded in action, arrived at the family home at Sagamore Hill late yesterday afternoon after surgeons at the Army Base Hospital at Williamsbridge had granted him an overnight leave so that he could come here to see his five-month-old son, Archie, who was born in Boston while Captain Roosevelt was in France.

He arrived at an Atlantic port on a hospital ship on Monday, and immediately telephoned to Colonel Roosevelt here, so that his wife, who was Miss Grace S. Lockwood of Boston, could arrange to go to see him. She left last night for Washington, expecting to meet Captain Roosevelt at the home of his sister, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, but he was directed to proceed at once to the Base Hospital at Williamsbridge, in the Bronx.

When he reached the base hospital he telephoned to his home and Colonel and Mrs. Roosevelt started at once for the hospital by motor. They had hardly reached there when Mrs. Archie Roosevelt arrived. She had learned in Washington that the army order for his transfer had been issued. After the members of the family had been talking with him for a few minutes in one of the visitors' rooms, a surgeon directed Captain Roosevelt to report at once to an examination room.

While the surgeons were making minute examination of the shrapnel wounds in his arm, Captain Roosevelt told them that he would like to see his young son at Sagamore Hill. Upon learning that the officer had never seen the child the surgeon said that he could leave the hospital for the night upon condition that he would be "careful." Despite the slight stiffness of the injured wounds in his right knee, Captain Roosevelt made good speed back to the visitors' room with the news. The surgeon followed the door of his father's uniform, not a horse being careful, he asked.

When the motor drew up at Sagamore Hill, Archie Jr. was asleep in a carriage under a tree. He objected at being disturbed, in tones that stirred the admiration of his grandfather, but he became quiet when his interest was directed to the gold and blue stripes on the sleeve of his father's uniform, denoting a year's service at the front and a wound in battle.

Captain Roosevelt's arm is paralyzed because shrapnel fragments cut the nerves in the elbow, and he is forbidden to try to raise it from his side. It is not in a sling, but is bound in a bandage of elastic and linen. Surgeons here have expressed no opinion upon the condition of the arm, but it was reported that surgeons in France said it would be several months before he would be able to use it freely. The wound in his knee is healed completely and he is no longer lame. The same shell that injured his leg broke his left arm in two places.

His general condition is excellent, and surgeons said he appeared to have been benefited greatly by the sea voyage. He was received on March 11 last while in command of a platoon from the 26th Infantry, at a training camp in the States, where he was wounded. When he fell, he was carried to the dressing station and thence to a hospital in Paris, where he received the Croix de Guerre. All his protests against being invalided home were disregarded. Theodore, Jr., has also been wounded in France, and his younger brother, Quentin, was killed in an air fight in July. Captain Roosevelt and Major Theodore went to France in June, 1917, after they had finished their courses at the Plattsburg Training Camp.

Fever Bills for School Shoes

Overshadowing all other advantages for children's shoes is Neolin's longer wear.

Neolin gives special benefits on school-shoes—because school children need both the extra wear and flexibility of Neolin.

Neolin is always the same quality.

On children's shoes, as on those of grown-ups, it gives steady, resolute service.

It reduces shoe-bills by making purchases less frequent.

Neolin Soles keep school-shoes better-looking, too. When shoes get wet, Neolin Soles hold them in shape. Waterproof are these soles, saving many an anxious hour when the roads are wet, and children will play outdoors.

Neolin flexibility encourages young feet to grow healthy.

Ask your usual dealer to show you shoes on Neolin Soles—children's shoes, street shoes for women, Sunday shoes and work-shoes for men.

Get the family's old shoes together and have the repair-man nail or sew full-soles or half-soles of Neolin on all of them.

But be sure it is Neolin—see that the name is on the bottom of the sole.
