La MARQUISE de FONTENOY

New Premier of France Unpopular Because of Putting on Taxes—Son of Noted Engineer—King George's Descent From High King of Ancient Ireland

(Copyrighted, 1911, by the Brentwood Company.)
France's new premier, Joseph Caillaux, is one of the most unpopular men in the world. He is unpopular because of his position as premier of the income tax system, which is the private life of the citizen. Some time ago, when he was minister of finance in the Clemenceau administration, he created a great outcry by proposing that fox, deer and bear hounds should pay a heavy tax, in addition to the ordinary dog tax.

The uproar raised by this proposal was enormous, when the fact is borne in mind that there are only about 150 packs of hounds left for hunting purposes in France. Hunts, however, are regarded as aristocratic. It is considered almost essential for a gentleman to be able to hunt, and, to be intelligently interested in that particular form of sport.

The Marquis de Laigle, who with regard to hunting in France, enjoys much the same pre-eminence that is held by Lord Lonsdale in England, called upon Minister Caillaux in the name of the St. Hubert Club, of the Jockey Club, and of the leading horse-breeding associations to inform him that the proposed tax would absolutely do away with hunting in France, since the owners of every one of the packs of hounds would be obliged to pay the tax. He had decided to get rid of their hounds if the tax became law. He pointed out to the minister, moreover, that whereas the income tax would bring in a relatively small sum, the loss to the allied interests would amount to something like $10,000,000 a year, since the abolition of hunting would mean the discharge of all the servants employed in connection with the hunt, and losses to horse dealers, horse shoers, tailors, boot-makers, blacksmiths, saddlers, liveries, stables, etc.

These arguments, eloquently submitted to Minister Caillaux proved effective, for the minister, realising that if the packs of hounds were abolished as threatened by the marquis, there would be no hounds left to tax, abandoned all project, and the future of hunting was saved from extinction in France.

The interest between the marquis and the statesman must have been entertaining, for it is difficult to conceive a greater contrast than that which exists between the new premier, who is an expert financier of the French re-appeal order, blended with a professional knowledge of political science, and Robert de Laigle, who was secretary of the embassy in London and who, during the last ten years of the Napoleonic empire, who is married to a daughter of the historic house of de Colbert, and who, in the old school, leads at his chateau of Fontenoy, near Compiègne, the life of a great territorial magnate, devoted to the hunt, to horse breeding, his other pastimes consisting of water-color painting and the collection of rare books.

Caillaux is a son of the engineer of the same name, who with the Belgian, De Gansmont, first conceived the idea of constructing a tunnel beneath the channel between Calais and Dover, and drew Sir John Lubbock, then president of the London and Dover, into adopting their plan. The tunnel would have become an accomplished fact at the time had it not been for the opposition of the English military authorities, who declared that the existence of the tunnel would imperil England's means of military defence, and parliament declined to give its sanction to the scheme.

Premier Caillaux has a certain likeness to the late Duc de Morny, and rather cultivates the resemblance by affecting what he imagines to be the manner of the famous statesman, who was the father of Napoleon III. It is owing to this rather than to any disposition of the government, announced in the past, that he conveys the impression of a former vicar or ex-actor. He is happily married to a very rich and charming widow, whose large fortune renders him wholly independent of the emoluments of office and also of any danger of having to restrict his income tax to the event of his income tax bill becoming law.

It is curious that Caillaux's advent to power as premier, should have followed the other day by Prince Victor Napoleon, after a long period of silence—a manifesto in which he states that "France would not tolerate a master, but wishes a leader," and, disclaiming all dynastic rights, insists that "the very name of Napoleon stands for the sovereignty of the nation, the equality of liberty of conscience, and the universal suffrage, for Prince Napoleon soon two years ago came out in the most flat-footed way against the proposal to introduce the income tax into France, as a hateful and intolerable violation of the privacy of the citizen, and

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTE CAMERON

HE is usually as well dressed as any woman she is with. And yet everybody knows she has far less meant than most of her companions. Her dress of action is to buy very nice, though simple things and then keep them looking well about twice as long as the average woman. Everybody wonders how she accomplishes this. Here are some of the minutiae of the trick explained to one wanderer.

"In the first place, I never buy anything that is cheap or shoddy or extreme in any way. I am willing to pay well for good lines and good materials. If necessary, I economize on trimmings. Consequently, my things will always be all right for three or four seasons if I keep them well."

"I always have on hand in summer a plain sailor hat, which I can wear in stormy or even damp or threatening weather. Such a hat will last me three or four seasons, and the saving to my nice hair is incalculable."

"In winter I have a felt sailor for the same purpose. It always has a good looking rain coat and wears it when old faster than wetting it. A suit that is never worn or caught in a storm will look well about twice as long as one that has had several such experiences."

"I always keep two or three pairs of shoes going and keep those not in use on shoe-trees. You know one pair of shoes worn constantly will go to pieces much more quickly because they never get a chance to get rid of the animal heat which rots the leather."

"I also change my stockings at least three or four times a week. They wear longer that way."

"I have a full set of skirt and coat hangers and keep all my gowns and suits on them when not in use."

"I never take off a hat without brushing it thoroughly with a stiff hair brush. I polish my shoes at least three times a week. You know that softens and preserves the leather and keeps them looking well."

"I keep a pair of storm shoes and try never to get my good shoes wet."

MANY MORE DEATHS DUE TO THE HEAT

Twenty-Four in Two Days in Philadelphia—Nine Drownings on Tuesday in New York

Philadelphia, Pa., July 4.—Nine additional deaths from heat were reported at the coroner's office today, making a total of 24 deaths within the past two days. The maximum temperature here today was 93 degrees which was reached at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

New York, July 4.—The cumulative effect of three days of the hottest weather in the city has experienced in years, manifested itself today in a list of twenty deaths attributed to the heat. Prostrations were easily counted by the score and nine drownings were reported during the day. While an automobile was coming into town at a rapid pace during the storm last night it ran over a man at Charlesburg and broke his back and one of his legs in two places. There were five occupants in the machine at the time.

Ottawa, July 4.—Ottawa today is experiencing but slight surcease from the torrid conditions of the past three days. At noon the thermometer registered 88 in the shade with practically no breeze blowing. Work on many buildings is at a standstill and a number of firms have had to suspend heavy transportation operations.

Boston, July 4.—In eight of many people Anna H. White, 16 years old, of 7 Farrington street, Chelsea, and Sarah Gurdette, 15, who lived in the rear of 84 Lincoln street, Brighton, were drowned yesterday afternoon while bathing opposite the starting line of the Charles River speedway in Brighton.

The school record of Alys E. Kelley of Rockland, Mass., who has not been absent or tardy for 13 years, the whole time she has been going to school, is thought to be without parallel in the state.

THE IMPERIAL CONFERENCE WAS GREAT ADVANCE

Lord Curzon's Speech One of the Most Notable of Coronation Week—Imperial Idea Striding Steadily On

Lord Curzon's speech to the assembly of newspaper men from all over the Empire was one of the most notable utterances of the coronation week, both in its most serious note. Though you must not lose sight of the fact that the speech was made in a festive atmosphere, and that the speaker was one of the most distinguished statesmen of the Empire, it is still a speech of great importance.

COMMISSIONER GREAT SUCCESS IN SPOKANE

Three Months Trial Has Convinced Opponents That Administration is the Best Ever Had

Spokane, Wash., July 3.—Three months' trial of the commission form of government in Spokane has convinced many, including the severest critics of the plan, that the history of Great Britain, conducted with greater efficiency, economy and dispatch than under any other form of government, is now being followed in the city of 1881. Many wastes have been stopped, numerous abuses have been corrected, and modern methods are now employed in all the departments. The business of the city is conducted in the same manner in which a successful merchant or manufacturer operates his store or factory plant.

Bohler Fairley, commissioner of finance, says that, while there is nothing certain yet relative to a reduction of taxes, he has received 100 cents' worth of work for every dollar expended by the commission. Commissioner Fairley has received requests from more than 100 cities in various parts of the country for copies of the Spokane charter.

Donald: "That's strange. Because yeer mither would ye ye never gie her anything?"
Willie: "Weel, if I dinna gie ye aid mither anything what sort o' chance dae ye think ye've got?"
