

Housekeeping A-Top 7,240-Foot Mountain Play For Iowa Bride

Mrs. Paul Beard

Ames, Iowa, March 12.—Speaking of 7,240-foot mountains and their attendant inconveniences, how many young brides would fancy setting up housekeeping where Mrs. Paul Beard resides?

Mrs. Beard is one of the few women fire lookouts in the U. S. Forestry Service. During the summer she lives in a tiny glass house which is lashed by heavy steel cables to the top of a dizzy mountain peak at Harney, South Dakota.

Her home can be reached only by climbing a twenty-foot ladder. If she cares for a wonderful scenic view she may look into four states from the windows of her house, which stands 7,240 feet above sea level.

Food comes on the backs of burros up the mountainside from a tourist camp three miles away. Water is brought in bags from a distance of two miles.

Wood for the single stove has to be carried up the ladder in armfuls; and furniture—well, there's no baby grand piano in that house. Most of her

FROM WEALTH TO FLOOR SCRUBBER

Once College Honor Man and Leading Salesman, Kills Man Who Taunts Him.

New York, March 2.—Forty years ago Joseph Murphy was graduated with honors from Nicolette College, St. John's, Newfoundland. Twenty years ago he was widely known as the leading wholesale leather salesman in Canada and the New England States. Last week police took him from a cheap hotel, where he lived while working in a former saloon at 474 East 146th Street, swabbing the floor and cleaning up for the few dollars a week that enabled him to get food and lodging. He is locked up, charged with homicide.

The climax of Murphy's life of misfortune came when, gassed beyond endurance first by taunts about his condition, and then by blows, he seized a "knap" from the pocket of a man and plunged it into the neck of Joseph O'Rourke, a laborer, of 455 East 146th Street, one of a group of loungers in the saloon, who were amusing themselves at old Murphy's expense.

The death of Abel Doiron, a man who seemed only a human derelict vindicated the training and code of his youth and manhood. When searchers for him were beginning to think he would never be found, Murphy rang up the police at the Alexander Avenue station and quietly told them he was waiting for them in his room at the hotel.

Bad Investments Started Fall. Detectives who discovered his past said that he had been in the Massachusetts State Prison for a year and a half for a crime which he had committed when he was a boy.

The man, whose only previous quarrel was with fate, was placed in the police line-up for the detectives of the city to look at and remember as an offender against the law, and later Magistrate Frothingham held him without bail for examination on March 14 on suspicion of homicide.

Abel Doiron. The death of Abel Doiron occurred at his home in Shelburne on Friday afternoon of pneumonia following a grippé. He leaves his wife, six daughters and two sons.

O'Rourke died two hours later in Lincoln Hospital.

Customers Called Him "The Sage."

Murphy, the police learned, was known as "The Sage" by the customers of the saloon, because they recognized in him a man with a past history, who faced his mental position as a porter and floor-scrubber with philosophy.

Some of them, however, liked to tease the derelict, who is now sixty-two years old, and taunt him about his comments on life as he had seen it in his varied experience.

Chief among these, it is said, was O'Rourke, who set out to tease Murphy. The latter's quick replies to O'Rourke turned the tables and set the saloon hangers-on laughing at the younger man, who became angry and struck Murphy on the side.

With that, the bystanders said, the pent-up bitterness of a score of years of disappointment and wounded pride flashed into the man's face, and there followed the glint of the descending knife and the heavy fall of Murphy's forehead to the floor.

In the excitement Murphy slipped away, and the next act in the tragedy
