

Widows Worship Old Broken Mining Fan

Chicago, Ill., April 28.—The widows of Cherry, Ill., desolated by the mining horror several months ago, have saved the fan that helped keep the entombed miners alive for days after the main shaft was filled with flames and gases.

Upon the fan, rudely constructed of thin strips of wood nailed on a tree branch, was scrawled the last message of the miners:

"All Alive, 2 p. m., 14," told the story of their last stand against invading death. The body of a miner lying across the fan showed that the men had worked until exhausted and overcome by the poisonous gas. Because of this the widows marched to the company's office, when they learned that the fans were already loaded upon a freight car to be removed to Chicago and donated to the fans. It will be kept in Cherry as a monument to the men and boys who died in that hell underground.

PARSON LIFE FRIDGE NOT HARDY

Transgressors in the Gay Republic Take Much Comfort Out of Cells—Some Refuse Leave.

We have it on good authority that the way of transgressors is hard. And I dare say it is in most cases. But it does not seem to have any overpowering effect on the average French lawbreaker. In England, once you get into the clutches of the law, a little account is taken of sentiment. Stern, implacable justice is all that evil-doers have any right to expect, and as a rule, it is all they receive. English prisons and penal colonies are run on severe, unsympathetic lines, and no excessive indulgence is shown toward their inmates. This is as it should be.

But in France different notions seem to prevail as to the treatment of criminals, with the result that the prison does not instill the wholesome dread it does in England. Take the case of Duez, the official liquidator, who admits having swindled the French religious orders out of some $1,000,000. Although he is now under arrest, and may be sentenced to four or five years' detention, he does not seem to be in any distress. It does not appear to him that he is in any way in the hands of the law. He is in the hands of the law, but he is not in the hands of the law. He is in the hands of the law, but he is not in the hands of the law.

English Actress Airs Views of Marriage

New York, April 29.—A flutter of interest was caused last evening by the announcement of the engagement of Miss Beatrice Forbes Robertson to the New Theatre Company, to Mr. Swinburne Hale, lawyer and well-known man about town. Miss Forbes-Robertson is sister of Forbes-Robertson, the great English actor, who is hailed as the true successor of Sir Henry Irving in Shakespearean roles. Since coming to this country the bride-to-be has proven very popular and Yorkonites are delighted at the prospect of the fair English girl becoming a permanent resident of New York.

Recently in a newspaper interview, Miss Forbes-Robertson advanced the need of virile mothers for the development of a strong race of men as one of the arguments in favor of woman suffrage.

"If nature had intended one sex for seclusion, for segregation, she said, womanhood had become a far different creature. If in the interest of the children it were best for women to be deprived of the mental and political activities of men, then the children of segregated mothers would be healthier than free women. But the contrary is the truth. Segregation and idleness have weakened woman to a great degree."

FOUND JEWELS WORTH $50,000

Mrs. Moss' Jewels Found Hidden in Base of Old Pedestal After Search Lasting Several Months.

How $50,000 worth of jewelry which had been hidden in the hollow base of an old pedestal was accidentally discovered two months ago by Beverly Kator, grandson of Mrs. Theodore Octavia Moss, the eccentric widow of the veteran theatrical manager, who died last January in the old-fashioned brownstone house at 543 Madison Avenue, New York, was told yesterday by Mr. Kator and corroborated by Mrs. Moss's son, Royal E. Moss.

The finding of the jewelry ended a search which had been kept up by members of the Moss family since the mother's death, for during her lifetime it was well known that she possessed many valuable diamonds and other precious stones, the exact whereabouts of which she never divulged. Her death left all trace of them vanished.

The gems were sold early this month at an administrator's sale to close the estate and brought $20,000. The other effects are now being sold at public auction at the Madison Avenue house, and the sale reveals a remarkable hoard of jewels.

For the last twenty-three years of her life it was her idiosyncrasy to purchase large quantities of dry goods and other merchandise, and store them in a room on the top floor of her home. Few of the bundles were ever unwrapped, and even the members of her family were astounded when the room was unlocked and the contents revealed.

PAWLOW TESTS ON HUMANS

Dr. Kast Reports on Sham-Feeding Experiments to Secure Gastric Juice—Article in Post Graduate.

New York, April 30.—Medical journals issued by leading hospitals in this city show that the Pawlow dog experiments in gastric secretions are being practiced not alone upon animals, but also upon human beings.

Professor Pawlow, of St. Petersburg, invented an operative procedure by which slits are made in the throats of dogs and double stomachs formed by an operation. These animals are caged and plates of raw meat are placed before them. They greedily swallow their food, which falls to the floor through the hole in the esophagus. The gastric juices being excited in the stomach, are collected by means of a small tube.

These "sham-feedings," as they are called, are now being tried upon human beings, according to an article that appears in the Post Graduate, a monthly journal of medicine and surgery published by the Board of Directors of the New York Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital.

Dr. L. Kast describes in this periodical how he has carried on these experiments with dogs. He adds:—

"Recent examinations on human beings which have a therapeutic purpose have been operated upon in the same way as Pawlow had done with animals, have shown that there is a complete uniformity between the human stomach and the stomach of the dog. Thus I obtained in the sham feeding trial, in experimenting with alcohol, the same results as in dogs."

Dr. Kast, author of the article "On excessive Gastric Secretion" in the Post Graduate, is adjunct professor of medicine in the New York Medical School and Hospital. He says, in part:—

"If a dog is operated upon according to Pawlow's method and a sham feeding is given it is possible to obtain the gastric juices from the fistula. When it is collected from time to time as it pours out from the fistula it can be shown that the different portions vary with regard to quantity and acidity."

"The same conditions hold good for gastric secretion, which is not stimulated by peptic influence alone, as sham feeding does, but also by the presence of foodstuffs in the stomach. This can be shown on dogs which have a so-called small stomach, according to Pawlow's method."

"It is easy to show that the amount of gastric juice depends upon the amount of food. The gastric secretory apparatus is, indeed, wonderfully regulated and points, under normal conditions, just as much juice into the stomach as is necessary, with regard to the digestive work to be done."

"These facts have been established by Pawlow, and have been verified by all competent experimenters. In experiments with alcohol on Pawlow dogs, which I carried out in the pathological institute of Berlin, I frequently could obtain, after the same food, or after the same sham feeding, three and four times the amount of gastric juice. This was added or brought into the stomach for a short time before the psychic or local secretory stimuli were applied."

"These facts concern the stomach of the dog. The next question is whether these facts correspond with the condition of the human stomach. Recent examinations on human beings which for therapeutic purposes have been operated upon in the same way as Pawlow had done with animals, have shown that there is in the principle features a complete uniformity of the human stomach and the stomach of the dog, at least with regard to the secretory function."

"Figure A shows graphically the secretion after sham feeding in the dog. Figure B shows the same in the human subject after sham feeding. The similarity between them is apparent."

"Most of the experiments in dogs were carried out on healthy animals. It is true that sham feeding necessitates operative preparation of the animal, and anatomically the individual is abnormal."

"In order to test a human stomach with regard to its secretion we simulate it to this function, and by drawing after a certain time the stomach contents and determining the amount of hydrochloric acid we draw our conclusions."

ONE POINT OF VIEW

By COLIN MCKAY.

St. John does not only need clean streets. It needs a comprehensive plan of city development—a plan which will regulate its growth and assure the realization sometime in the future of the beautiful St. John which is growing up in haphazard fashion. In the heart of the city practically all the streets are too narrow, and this condition is being extended to the suburbs.

German cities have long had the power of laying out streets, and regulating the construction of houses, for miles beyond their proper boundaries, and British cities are acquiring such powers. St. John should secure the right to regulate its growth. In the near future it will have spent millions to widen many of its streets. It may, however, avoid the necessity of expending millions for this purpose by adopting a plan of city development, and seeing that it is adhered to in the future.

Many American and all German cities have adopted such a policy. Indeed city-making commissions are now recognized departments of many city governments. These commissions are made up of an engineer, a landscape architect, an artist, a building architect, and a city official or business man accustomed to dealing with civic affairs. After studying the topography of the city, its industrial conditions, requirements, etc., these commissions prepare a plan or what they call a city charter, and this plan is adopted by the city council. It is a plan which the people may set before themselves as a goal of endeavor.

To the city which has adopted such a policy, it is desirable to open new streets, or widen old ones, and the city takes measures to ensure that when the streets are laid out, the new constructions shall not encroach upon the ideal street lines. It lays down a system of street plottings for the city, and in the future, when the street system of the parent city, and in general seeks to regulate the street development of the city in a way calculated to increase the efficiency and economy of the city's business or organization by facilitating the movement of traffic and to make the streets not only broad and beautiful, but a greater source of health and cheerfulness to the people.

It also indicates ideal locations for any public buildings which may be erected in the future, as well as parks, squares or public play grounds for the children.

A Crusade Against Ugliness. The public authorities, the man of business and the workman, the preacher and the judge, the woman and the children—all have an intimate interest in the crusade against dirt and ugliness. It is a matter that touches the wellbeing of the wealthy as well as of the poor. As all the great religious teachers have declared and all the philosophers concluded, society is so constituted that an evil affecting any of its members is necessarily the concern of all—that no class can suffer from unnecessary ills without a disastrous reaction upon every other class. Inevitably disease bred in the unsanitary slum areas spreads into the sections of the city occupied by the mansions of the wealthy, borne thither by the democratic winds of heaven or by some trinket manufactured by the slum dwellers.

To set before ourselves a vision of the city beautiful, and industriously try to realize it, to endeavor to make the environment of the poor wholesome and attractive; to give to the children space to play and to the babies and mothers fresh air and quiet; to satisfy the cravings for brightness and make possible the awakening of ambition and the love of the beautiful in all ranks of society; to have the artistic impulses and eclectic sense of the best elements of the community may find a large field for high endeavor. In the vision and the dream have ever found inspiration to high endeavor, and nothing will so quicken the civic spirit and the civic right conscience as to put before ourselves an ideal picture of what our city might and ought to be.

Prisoner Lives High

Why this incoherence, this synchism, the absence of any consistent policy for the most important and extensive series of frauds that Frenchmen have known since Panama? It is because, as M. Barthelemy, the minister of justice himself admits, there is something rotten in the French magistracy. Or is it due to the impurity with which swindlers in this country, provided they have enough influence in high places, escape the punishment they rightly merit? Even when sentence is pronounced, and the culprit is taken to goal money can do a lot to soften his incarceration. I have known cases in which criminals in French prisons were able to buy their way out of their cells, and to smuggle in from their friends outside delicacies which find no place in the ordinary prison fare. Powl, roasts beef, most of the time, although the introduction of these luxuries was a distinct breach of the prison regulations.

France is notorious for its "hospitality," and so agreeable is a sojourner there that many criminals, at the approach of winter, regularly arrange to get out of their cells, and to come out into the balmy air of Springtime and the genial sunshine. Less than three months ago, the story goes, a new prisoner was sentenced to six months' detention. The new establishment had cost nearly 4,000 pounds to build, and the unfortunate prisoner budget made no allowance for the warden and his "guests." The Governor finally solved the dilemma by ordering the policeman, who was married, should take up his quarters in the prison with his meals. But after a few days the policeman got tired of this. The profit he made on the arrangement was very small, and in a confidential tone he confided to the prisoner that, if he cared to take French leave, he would see that the policeman was given him to do so. But his charge quickly reassured him on the point.

"I'm all right here," he said. "Your wife is an excellent cook, and she's very kind to me. This is a nice, new prison. I haven't been so well off for a long time. You don't catch me running away. What's more, the discharge man, I'll jolly soon be back."

Bound to Stay. Then the chief warden tried to persuade the prisoner that he would be well advised to make himself scarce. But he might as well have saved the trouble, for he met with no more success than the policeman. All the doors and windows of the prison were left wide open. He was given permission, he was even asked to go for a walk in the hope that he would disappear for good. He thanked his jailers and several times went for a stroll round the neighborhood. But he always returned again in time for his meal. One night, however, he met an old friend when he was out, and after a glass or two of wine they found so many things to talk about that it was 3 o'clock in the morning when the "prisoner" returned to his lodgings. But although he hung on to the bell, and refused to get up, no one came to the prison gate. At last the policeman opened a window and shouted angrily:—

"If you don't be gone, I'll fire on you!"

The lodger took the hint, but at 6 o'clock he was back again, and his guardian had to be admitted to his cell. It is said that the Sous-Prefect is seriously thinking of offering the "prisoner" a loan to go elsewhere for his food and lodging. Paris correspondent London Globe.

It is hard to convince a man he is a fool and entirely unnecessary. You can fool him without convincing him.

DOING AWAY WITH THE OPIUM

San Francisco Government Officials Reap Large Rewards For Their Vigilance—Every Kettleful Worth $450.

San Francisco, April 28.—In the alleyway back of the San Francisco custom house, early this week, a man in overalls and undershirt might be seen from time to time, bearing a granite iron kettle. He would issue from the upper room in the basement of the old fort like brick government building, and head for the sewer manhole, at the side of which he would rest his kettle, only to overturn it with a kick. After the steaming oily black contents had run through the grating, he would return with the empty kettle. The stuff he dumped into the sewer was "dope soup" and each kettle of it was worth in the currency of Chinatown, $450.

Nothing illustrates better the matter of fact nature of the opium habit. The stuff was taken in the same prosaic way by customs inspectors, who work for days on end, tracing Pacific liners, patiently tapping lifebelts, mattresses, dunnage tins, stanchions and bulkheads, for the telltale clink of tin or the echo of hollowed grating. The stuff he dumped into the sewer was "dope soup" and each kettle of it was worth in the currency of Chinatown, $450.
