REST ON SUNDAY LAST, FOR Pte. HAZEN THOMAS, OF THE FIRST DEPOT BATTALION, WHOSE SAD DEATH OCCURRED IN ST. JOHN ON SUNDAY JUNE 2ND.

The news of his death came as a great shock to the community as well as to his loved ones.

Mr. Blackall spoke in kindly sympathetic terms, impressing upon the bereaved friends of the deceased that Pte. Thomas had done his duty and nobly answered his country's call, and although he had not reached the fighting lines over there, he was as much a soldier as any in bearing his suffering with fortitude and patience.

A large attendance from both Upper and Lower Bocabec as well as a number of visitors from the Bethel and Elmsville divisions of Mr. Blackall's circuit, were present at the service.

The deep sympathy of the community is extended to the grief stricken wife and parents in this their great hour of trial.

CAMPOBELLO

June 10

The event of the week was a forest fire which raged from early on Monday until Friday morning, when the falling rain lent it kindly aid to prevent further damage. The conflagration devastated the woods from Eastern Head to Herring Cove, destroying a vast amount of woodland, also consuming more than seventy-five cords of fire wood which had been cut by the residents during the winter for home use. For a time a number of dwelling houses on the main road and the road connecting with Herring Cove were greatly endangered, but by the efforts of the inhabitants these were saved. The intense heat from the flames put a stop to all lumbering operations for a few days. The origin of the fire is unknown.

The placid waters of Head Harbor come near being the scene of another tragedy on Monday. Two brothers, Albert and Frank Galley, were putting off a mooring for their boat. They had two boats with a pole across from boat to boat, and an immense stone fastened to the middle of the pole. The pole broke, and the weight of the stone carried both boats to the bottom, Frank Galley with them. Albert, who could swim, remained on the surface. In a few seconds the boats and Frank came up. Albert succeeded in getting him on the bottom of one of the boats.

Their cries for help were heard by Mr. Randolph Jackson, who, with the assistance of Miss Annie Brown, went to their help and brought them safely to land. Much praise is due Miss Brown and Mr. Jackson for their promptness in rescuing these men, whose death would have caused great grief in the village.

THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO

WHEN William IV was lying on his death-bed at Windsor, the firing for the anniversary of Waterloo took place, and on his inquiring and learning the cause, he breathed out faintly, "It was a great day for England." We may say it was so, in no spirit of vainglorious boasting on account of a well-won victory, but as viewed in the light of a liberation for England, and the civilized world generally, from the dangerous ambition of an unscrupulous and too powerful adversary.

When Napoleon recovered his throne at Paris, in March 1815, he could only bring from an exhausted and but partially loyal country about two hundred thousand men to oppose to nearly a million of troops which the allied sovereigns were ready to muster against him. His first business was to sustain the attack of the united British and Prussians, posted in the Netherlands and it was his obvious policy to make an attack on these himself before any others could come up to their assistance. His rapid advance at the beginning of June, before the English and Prussian commanders were aware of his having left Paris; his quick and brilliant assaults on the separate bodies of Prussians and British at Ligny and Quatre Bras on the 16th, were movements marked by all his brilliant military genius. And even when, on the 18th, he commenced the greater battle of Waterloo with both the advantage still remained to him in the divided positions of his double enemy, giving him the power of bringing his whole host concentratedly upon one of theirs; thus neutralizing to some extent their largely superior forces. And, beyond a doubt, through the superior skill and daring which he thus showed, as well as the wonderful gallantry of his soldiery, the victory at Waterloo ought to have been his. There was just one obstacle, and it was decisive—the British infantry stood in their squares immovable upon the plain till the afternoon, when the arrival of the Prussians gave their side the superiority. It is unnecessary to repeat details which have been told in a hundred chronicles. Enough that that evening saw the noble, and in large part veteran, army of Napoleon retreating and dispersing never to re-assemble, and that within a month his sovereignty in France had definitely closed. A heroic, but essentially rash and ill-omened adventure, had ended in consigning him to those six years of miserable imprisonment which form such an anti-climax to the twenty of conquest and empire that went before.

If we must consider it a discredit to Wellington that he was unaware on the evening of the 15th that action was so near—even attending a ball that evening in Brussels—it was amply redeemed by the marvellous coolness and sagacity with which he made all his subsequent arrangements, and the patience with which he sustained the shock of the enemy, both at Quatre Bras on the 16th, and on the 18th in the more terrible fight of Waterloo. Thrown on that occasion into the central position among the opponents of Bonaparte, he was naturally and justly hailed as the saviour of Europe, though at the same time nothing can be more clear than the important part which the equal force of Prussians bore in meeting the French battalions. Thenceforth the name of Wellington was venerated above that of any living Englishman.

According to Alison, the battle of Waterloo was fought by 80,000 French and 250 guns, against 67,000 English, Hanoverians, Belgians, etc., with 156 guns, to which were subsequently added certain large bodies of Prussians, who came in time to assist in gaining the day. There were strictly but 22,000 British troops on the field, of whom the total number killed was 1417, and wounded 4023. The total loss of the allied forces on that bloody day was 22,378, of whom there were killed 4172. It was considered for that time a very sanguinary conflict, but—

DESERTIONS FROM MONTREAL DEPOT BATTALIONS

No information has been received at the Montreal Military Headquarters in regard to the formation of a French Canadian brigade.

The increase in recruiting in the province is considered most encouraging by the staff at No. 4 Division headquarters, and it is hoped, if the increase continues, that both the first and second depot battalions will soon be brought up to requirements. The strength of each should consist of 52 officers and 2,138 men. Today's figures show the 1st Depot to have 40 officers and 1,174 men, making the number required to be 12 officers and 964 men. The "N" Company has 1,475 men. The 2nd Depot Battn. has recruited 33 officers and 1,998 men, requiring 19 officers and 240 men to complete. The "N" Company has 4,045 men.

The absentees to-day under the Military Service Act are: 1st Quebec Depot Regiment, 1,020; 2nd Quebec Depot Regiment, 3,181.—Montreal Herald, June 6.
