Rippling Rhymes. The chilly wind begins to sing, it's been on ice, I trow; the overcoat I've soaked last spring would be a blessing now. But it will have to stay in pawn; the coat of living's high, and all my bank account is gone, there's not a kopeck left. The waiting clouds are hanging low to-day, there is a threat of rain; the trees are gaunt and bare and grey, and in the blast complain. The leaves are flying everywhere, they soar and swoop like bats; and all the chill October air seems full of dust and hate. As though it had a human throat, that cold wind pipes its tune; alas, the good old overcoat I soaked the tenth of June! Oh, other men may face the storm, the biting, arctic breeze, and keep their slats and innards warm, but I must shake and freeze. In my sad grange that has no meat this winter I must stay, and wish I had the overcoat I soaked one vernal day.

SAVE TO WIN. DOMINICAN TOBACCO CROP. Owing to the high prices obtained for the 1917 crop a large acreage was planted for tobacco this year in the Dominican Republic, and it was expected the yield would total approximately 57,500,000 pounds, or double the average drought, however, has done so much damage it is now likely that the crop will not exceed 23,000,000 pounds. The greater part of the crop will be exported to France, Spain, Algiers and Holland. The amount remaining from the 1917 crop is about 12,420,000 pounds.
