Fate of the Peacemaker

(Cleveland Plain Dealer.)

An eastern man at a baseball game was annoyed by a squabble that delayed the contest, and descending from his seat he offered to arbitrate the dispute. His first wor's to the nurse in the hospital where he awoke several hours later were: "Cyclone, wasn't it?" Of course, the moral is as old as the hills. The man who officiously interferes in a family quarrel may expect that all personal grievances will be forgetten while the entire crowd turns in and hands him all the credentials necessary for a quick ride in a bounding ambulance.

The Indispensable Man.

Let no man fall into the dear delusion that he is an undispensable part of this world's machinery. No matter how much he may overestimate his importance, it is yet probable, at least possible, that he has a defunction, it exists a constitution of the whirl, having still breath enough to last him while he surveys the situation, and he will find that the wheels will go right on turning in the old familiar way.

Among the people who arived here from England the other day was one who has come to this country just to enjoy himself, after having amassed a competence by following the cheerful calling of official cockroach killer to the British Government.

Probably few persons are aware that the natural habitat of the cockroach is a British postoffice. Most of the buildings devoted to that purpose are cld, all of them are dirty and every was of them is alive with roaches.

There are professional rat catchers and roach killers in all countries, but the methods they adopt are usually trade secrets, and probably no two men follow the same process. The only condition upon which they will work is that they shall have the building entirely to themselves from a certain hour at night until a certain hour in the morning, and that no one shall be allowed to spy upon them.

By the time it is necessary to resume busi-

lowed to spy upon them.

By the time it is necessary to resume business the professional has carefully removed all traces of his work, and is ready to depart. What he has done during the voiceless hours of the night or what materials he has worked with are no one's business. Every roach in the place is dead, and that is enough. The charge for such a night's work in England is £5.

It must not be supposed that the British Government paid over this amount with revenient paid over this amount with some effort to save that item of expense. On the contrary, it tried in every way to find out the roach killers' secret, but for a long out the roach killers secret, but for a long time without success. The only evidence it had to go upon was the dead roaches. When these were swept out it was remarked that the few found after the expert was gone were as hard as iron, in fact they might have been intended for bric-a-brac. Their weight, also, seemed to be out of all proportion to their size and number.

Several specimens of the genus cucaracha defunctus having been submitted to chemical analysis it was determined beyond question that the interior of the insect was composed entirely of plaster of Paris and glucose, and and it seemed that the glucose must have originally been in sugar, which had been swallowed in conjunction with the plaster of Paris, just as human beings swallow whiskev in water.

Armed with this discovery, the services of the professional seemed no longer necessary whiskey in water.

Armed with this discovery, the services of the professional seemed no longer necessary and plaster of Paris, mixed with sugar, was plentifully sprinkled about a certain post-office which had been selected as an experimental station or proving ground. So far from the stuff's killing off the roaches in that particular postoffice it was observed that after the first night's feast there were probably double the number of cock roaches on hand and that within a week every roach in town had apparently left its usual haunts for quarters at the postoffice.

Upon asking for scientific advice in the matter the authorities were caimly informed that the increase was nothing remarkable and that all roaches on hand had probably been bred upon the premises unassisted by immigration, since it was well known to naturalists that a single pair of healthy roaches, if well nourished and preserved from interference and accident, would increase to 11,00,000 roaches within a year.

There being already about 1,000,000 roaches on the proving grounds the authorities concluded that the building would not hold the 648,000,000,000,000 which would be due within a month, so they sent for the professional and gave up another £5. He shut himself up in the building about 9 o'clock that night and he departed with the dawn and there was not a single living roach left in the place.

Careful chemical analysis of some of the ace. Careful chemical analysis of some of the place.

Careful chemical analysis of some of the carcasses showed not a trace of any vegotable or mineral poison; nothing but the same old stone interiors, made up of plaster of Paris and sugar.

It was observed that when the postoffice authorities put down the mixture themselves the roaches evidently liked it, but it appeared that they could pick out every particle of sugar and leave every grain of plaster. When the place was swept out in the morning and the mixture which had been spread the night before was examined it was found to be absolutely free from sugar and could have been sold for calcined gypsum, commercially pure. What might have been the condition of the mixture used by the professional, if he spread anything, no one knew, because he left nothing behind him.

After some years of delay and red tape, during which the professional gathered in his $25 with regularity and frequency, a postal employee after thinking the matter over concluded that inasmuch as plaster of Paris was found in cockraches only after death it must have been introduced to the cockroach's anatomy by the professional. The secret evidently was not what to use, but how to make the insect swallow it.

To make it swallow the sugar was early. Why was it that the roaches would swallow the plaster of Paris laid out for them by the professional and would not touch that offered them by the government?

Mature deliberation led them to the conclusion that, the reason was that the cockroach could distinguish between plaster of Paris and the sugar and that the professional must possess some secret drugs which he mixed with the other ingredients in such a manner os to blind the cockroach's fine sense of discrimination in such matters.

This led to a long series of experiments during which the number of cockroaches it and the led to a long series of experiments during which the number of cockroaches that the services of the professional had to be called in twice as often as they were before the postoffice went into the business. This could not last. Somewhere, some time surely in the eark byways of official fift there must be found a man fit to graphic with any problem, no matter how impose the suring already been applied to iffe there must be found a matter how immense. This much desired individual happened along about a year ago, hence the retirement of the professional to the undisturbed enjoyment of his well deserved.

Insamuch as no drug or other identiture seemed to have the power to make the cockroach lose its fine power of discernment in the matter of the difference between plaster of Paris and sugar, it would seem to be worth while to inquire by what sense or senses the distinction was made.

This led to the discovery that the cockroach, while it might be very clear in some respect. Bas its limitations in the matter of differentiation and that if the sugar and the plaster of Paris were absolutely alike in everything but taste it would swallow both.

Microscopic examination of plaster of Paris and sugar led to the discovery that what is known as loing sugar exactly resembles plaster of Paris in the size of grain, the weight and the color. This was tried, but the result was only partly satisfactory—enough, however, to show that the secret was partly solved.

The problem seemed to be to mix the two so thoroughly that they should be absolutely inseparable. This was done with machines, which sifted the two powders into the same receptacle with perfect equality, half and half of each.

When this scientifically prepared mixture was taken to the proving grounds and spread upon the floor there were no live roaches left in the morning. But as there was no professional there to clean up, the place was a sight, three barrowfuls of absolutely stoned and cockroaches being carried out of the place before business opened.

For thirty years they had been paying $25 a night for every postoffice that had to be cleaned out, just because they did not know that little secret.

The object is all that remains of a rat that had somehow been caught in a lead that had somenow been caught in a least pipe just about large enough to hold its body. It had run in and could not turn or back out, but it had no intention of dying there. It gnawed a hole through the pipe, but, unfortunately, it started to squeeze through before it had made the hole big enough, so it just got its head and forepaws through and died there after all. The plumber says he cut out the through before it had made the section of the pipe while overhauling the plumbing in the Lenox Library. He explains the good preservation of the specimen bysaying that it "must have" been frozen to death and got petrified."

en machinery by gas engines, which con-sume the gases escaping from blast fur-naces and coke ovens, such utilization of power having already been applied to about one-half the coke-producing capacity of Germany.

The economy which is being so generally practised in Germany is almost unknown in this country, as in Great Britain, but the British, having begun economy in Wales, it is to be presumed that the coal and coke plants of the United States will not lag behind in this proessive movement. The utilization of the enormous horse-power now going to waste in this country would add much to the national wealth and cheapen one of the most generally used products of the country. Mr. Rossi, an American engineer, has estimated that the power which could be saved in the metallurgic industries of the United States must amount to some millions of horse-power, and he believes that an output of fully one million horse-power could be maintained continuously.

In converting the millions of tons of coal turned annually into coke in this country one-fifth of the weight goes off in the form of escaping gases, of which experiments have shown that about one-fourth could be used in gas engines. In fourth could be used in gas engines. In the operation of blast furnaces Mr. Rossi calculates that from 30 to 35 horse-power could be obtained from the gases which escape in the manufacture of a single ton of pig iron, and when either of these figures is multiplied by the tonnage of pig iron manufactured in this country it will be seen that the waste is enormous. - New Orleans Times-Demo-
