JEVERILE TREATES .--- On Thursday even

ng, we witnessed the performance by the Juvenile Amateurs" at their new thes tre, St. Frangois Xavier Street, of the admi nedie, in two acts, of the Mock Doctor, and the burlesque tragedy of Bom-bustes Furiseo, and were very much delighted rith the way in which the whole went off. GREGORY and Sir JAMPER in the Mock Doc tor, sustained their parts well ; the former justice to the woodman, and when his garb was changed for that of the physician. igh his playing was good, still we think that a little of that grave and serious deportment by which persons of the medical profession are commonly distinguished, was ng. The youth who played Doncas did so with great credit to himself, and arently, much to the satisfaction of the le part of the audience, and proved (to poor Gregory's cost,) that though a woman, could "wear the breeches" sometimes The other characters were very ably perionated, particularly HELLEBORE, who looked the doctor to a T; and LEANDER, the lover. e appearance was sufficiently distingué somehow or other, "spoke small but who like a woman." The closing scene between Ginsony and Doncas was well got through and we cannot conclude this notice of the play without remarking, that the following sentences, "according" to Aristotle, " were very fina, very fine, indeed i"

"Bir fasper,--May I beg to know whether you are bipsycien or not--or, what the devil you are ?
