A Reminder.

By RUTH CAMERON.

A friend asked me the other day, in the course of a heart to heart talk, whether I had kept silence at a certain time because a request she had made had offended me. "No indeed," I started to say, and then I stopped and tried to remember and analyze just how I had felt. I had experienced a momentary annoyance when she made the request and then I had thought, "What nonsense, she has a perfect right to make it," and had tried to put the annoyance behind me. And then I had wondered why she made the request and had fallen to thinking of the matter and had doubtless become rather silent, and perhaps answered her remarks somewhat shortly. And then I had noticed that she had fallen silent too, and had tried to start up the conversation again, but finding that hard, had let it go after all.

I wasn't sure that I wasn't annoyed. Had there been some modicum of annoyance in my attitude after all? I was not quite sure there was not, so all I could honestly answer her waste don't think I was annoyed, but if I was, it was nonsense and I'm not now. Now that was a question of my own motive. If anyone could possibly know what it was, that person would be I. And I hadn't been able to be sure. Doubtless you see the corollary coming. If one cannot be absolutely sure of one's own motives, how then can one presume to judge another's? And We Know So Much Less About Them. And yet who of us does not cheerfully assume to judge the deeds and the motives behind them, even when we know the circumstances but partially, and the people about a tenth as well as we know ourselves. "I have lived long enough and practically enough to learn not to criticize the morals of men any more than I criticize their facial contours or their physical build," says a character in one of David Graham Phillips' books. One wonders if a man who had truly learned that lesson ever existed in real life. And Then Remind Yourself. The next time you are called on to judge of your own motives, notice how hard it is to attain absolute honesty. And the next time you start to judge other people's motives,—to say, "She did that because she wanted to attract attention to herself," or "She must have been jealous,"—remember how much less data you have to judge others on than you have to yourself. Doubtless that will not prevent you from forming some judgment—we seem to be made that way. But it may prevent you from giving it extensive publicity.

CARE FOR YOUR NAILS.

There is possibly no detail of the toilet which responds more quickly to care and attention with the least expenditure of time and money than the nails. Beautifully kept nails are an evidence of innate refinement and a careful personal toilet. It matters not how exquisite the contour of the hand, or how fair the skin, when the nails display evidence of neglect. The trimming of the nails has much to do toward the unsightly shaping often seen, and is sometimes the cause of the disfiguring white spots. The nail should be trimmed into a long oval, extending a trifle beyond the line of flesh in order to protect the finger tips. When the nails are inclined to become brittle, soak them for several minutes in warmed almond oil, pushing back the cuticle so the oil may penetrate to the root and so nourish it. It is sometimes necessary to use a rouge for the nails, if the blood is pale. Be careful how it is applied, as just a mite will go a long way. Ruddy nails, that is, with an artificial hue are considered vulgar. When both hands have been completed, cover each nail with powder and use the buffer, quickly polishing the surfaces, covering each roughly, especially at the base of the nail. Then wash the hands thoroughly, using a nail brush with soap.

PHILOSOPHY.

He lived a calm, contented life. And, though his home was small and plain. He loved it more than fame or gain. He had a curious notion, which kept him from envying the rich. And many a time he used to say: "These walls keep every wind away. These chairs and tables are not fine. But they serve every need of mine. And love abides within our door. What man of wealth possesses more?" "At night when I turn into bed! Peace pillows here my weary head. I soundly sleep the night hours through. Can more than that a rich man do? We've all we wish to eat and wear. Here love and laughter fill the day. Here we can sing and romp and play. Here we have all that gold can buy. No man of wealth has more than I."

'Olympic' Achievements

London, Jan. 8.—Dodging German submarines in the Mediterranean, trying to save sinking warships in the north Atlantic, and fighting off victorious U-boat attacks while carrying American troops are some of the achievements credited to the White Star liner Olympic during her adventurous career of the war.

These are only incidents of her experience, because, on account of her great passenger capacity, she was steadily and faithfully keeping to the task of transporting men and material for the armies in Europe.

First it was Chinese coolies for road building, then farmer boys from Canada to replace the losses of Vimy Ridge, and finally many thousands of Americans to face the German on the western battlefield. "Her work during the Gallipoli campaign," writes a member of the crew to the Daily News, "when she carried about 8,000 troops—at that time the greatest number ever carried by any ship—following upon her gallant attempts off the north of Ireland to tow the water-logged dreadnought Audacious, was sufficient to put her in the first rank of transports, but her subsequent work in bringing Canadian troops and Chinese labor battalions, and then her wonderful career since Christmas, 1917, when she arrived in New York for her first load of American troops must put her in a class by herself as a "trooper."

"She has carried well over 300,000 people while on war service. "It would not be correct to say that Captain Hayes has brought her through without a scratch, but her scars are marks of honor. She bent and fractured some of her plates when, in the darkness early one

WALY MASON.

The war is done, and we get back to peace time's old accustomed track. We're sitting up and taking note of things that lately seemed remote. Once more I hear the auto fan explain as loudly as he can how he went up huge hills on high, and didn't have his motor die. His spell seems revealant and sane, which would have been in wartime vain. Once more the dames, when cooped indoors, are talking of the dry goods stores and of the lovely lids they've seen, all decked with doodads red and green. And they allude to Mrs. Brown, who's brought the smoothest coat in town, while her poor husband strives to make his stand off something less a fake. And once again the ill health bores describe their ailments and their sores. A little time, while battles raged, their chronic sorrows were not staged, but now they've all come back again, to rasp the ears of patient men, and as of old the goostips clack; the private quarrels we forgot, we're re-remembering, smoking 'hot; the statesmen spring their oily smiles, and hand out bunk in forty styles. I wonder if we'll ever sigh for good old wartime days gone by, when there were themes of which to speak, and keep on peaking for a week?

morning, she strafed one of Germany's finest U-boats. "The Olympic had most of her adventures while she was carrying American troops. During March, April and May, 1918, the German submarine commanders made at least seven daring attacks on her. Not once did the enemy have time to launch a torpedo, for in every case he was greeted by a six-inch shell or one of the destroyers was on his track with her depth charges. Perhaps some of Germany's missing submarines are now lying below the track of the Olympic. "The most thrilling experience which the Olympic had took place in the darkness of early morning of May, 1918, near the entrance to the English Channel. It was just about 4 o'clock when the lookout man picked out of the almost total darkness the outline of a lurking submarine which was lying on the surface. Immediately after his warning shout one of our forward guns blazed out and the ship, with her helm hard over, spun around like a great racing yacht and crashed into the enemy. "The blow was, of course, not a clean one, or there would have been few survivors from the submarine. Judging from the damage on the bows of the ship when drydocked a few days later the blow cut off one end of the submarine. The rest drifted past the stern of the Olympic, and one of the gun-crew on the poop planted a six-inch shell squarely into it. One of the destroyers in the escort dropped behind, and by the light of star shells picked up 31 survivors, three of whom died on the way to port.

Household Notes.

In cold weather a hot drink should always be served after a frozen dessert. Primroses are delightful plants to have in a house that isn't kept too warm. A fireless cooker can be made out of an old wash boiler, packing it with excelsior.

DEAD But Alive

alism dead? Are our electorates apathetic, or inert? It is clear to the observer, that there is far from ideal in the status of government. It is incontrovertible that our people deem the government now in existence unsatisfying. Again, one sees with regret that our people and there giving voice to dissatisfaction and discontent, but on the whole to be a state of passivity, of inaction or muttering. One sees and hears, are the silent eruptions of a volcano. It is to be regretted that our people are so listless and that they are so indifferent to the political situation. It is the feeling of the people that things political are ings arrived at such a point that there is no more hope for the future. It is there a fire among the hearts of our people that will result in a result in ushering in a new era of rule? We are to the latter hypothesis. It is to the Government that we are questioning—at least—its actions that are the cause of our dissatisfaction with and our distrust of the government. ake it, that an election is the most interesting event of public-spirited people. It fails to evoke criticism, questioning—at least—its actions that are the cause of our dissatisfaction with and our distrust of the government.
