

The Braes of Yarrow

An Historical Tale of the Sixteenth Century.

When Gilbert Elliot sprang into the saddle the groom who had attended him, before releasing his hold of the saddle, said warningly—
"It's a kittle beast, maister, an' a'be's name the cannie for haen been fast i' the stable for twa days."
Gilbert nodded impatiently, and the horse bounded across the yard toward the Portcullis Gate. Whilst the portcullis was being raised and the drawbridge lowered, his horse pawed the earth with as much impatience as its master.
The road clear, the horse dashed over the bridge, and was then suddenly stopped by an old man who gripped the bridle stoutly. Gilbert raised his whip to strike the man, when the latter raised his face and he recognized Andrew Horne.
"Hands off, Andrew, every instant is precious for the life of Spens is on my speed."
"Then ye ken Tushielaw has him? The dwarf body Horne told me that somebody kened."
"I know all, and I have the King's pardon here. Do not stay me, man—"
"But my laddy wants to speak wi' ye."
"Where is she?"
"In St. Cuthbert's Abbey."
"Bid her rest there till I return. Let go, let go."
Andrew could restrain the horse no longer, as the rider now gossied it with his heels, and it darted along the Esplanade, down the High Street, and through the Netherbow Port.
Andrew gazed after him with a dissatisfied expression.
"The child's daft," he muttered as he stood puzzling his head as to the course he should adopt; "daft to think that my laddy would bide here when she kens maister is in the hands o' Tushielaw; and daft to think that single-headed he can rescue the maister from Tushielaw's grip on Yarrow braes. He couldnae dae't even if he had the King's ain order for't i' his hand."
With his grey head bowed in perplexity he took a few steps forward as if again to return to St. Cuthbert's, and again halted.
"There's ane nicht help us," he said, glancing wistfully back to the Castle, "if I could only win at her."
"It's a late hour to gang chappin' at the door o' great folk; but they stick i' the bog wha dinn't try to get out, see I'll gang back an' speer any way."
He retraced his steps to the Castle; the drawbridge had not yet been raised since Elliot had passed out, so he reached the postern without difficulty.
He knocked and was presently answered by the warder asking the password of the night.
"I dinnae ken the word, frien', but I want to see my Laddy Douglas on a matter o' life an' death."
"Ye cannae pass the nicht without the word," was the gruff response; "get over the brig as quick as ye cam' for it's gaun to be raised."
"Sauna save us, man, dae I no tell ye it's a matter of life and death I come about."
"Cannae help that."
"Would ye no jist speer at Captain Lindsay if he would see Andrew Horne?"
To this there was for several minutes no response. Then the trap of the postern was shoved back, and the warder eyed the importunate visitor suspiciously. Satisfied by his inspection, the postern was opened and Andrew was admitted.
He found himself in the presence of Lindsay, who, in going round the guard, happened to arrive at the gate just as his name was pronounced. Recognizing Andrew's voice and name as those of the man who had called daily to inquire for Gilbert Elliot during his illness, he gave orders at once to admit the suitor.
With grateful respect Andrew explained in an undertone the object of his visit, and Lindsay promised to assist him and to endeavour to procure an immediate audience with Mistress Douglas. He consented to this the more readily, as he had learned that Heron Barras had quitted the Castle a little while before.
Gilbert reached the ancient barge of barony, Linton-on-the-Lynn, without interruption. But while he was passing through the burgh his horse cast a shoe. The day had already broken so that he had no difficulty in finding the smithy, which was close to the burgh, and on the mail road to the South.
TO BE CONTINUED.

A patriotic Irishman has run away with $400 of the Whelan defence fund. Some patriotic lawyers will run away with the balance.
Affected young lady, seated in a rocking chair, reading the Bible, exclaimed: "Mother, here is a grammatical error in the Bible." Mother, lowering her spectacles and approaching the reader in a scrutinizing manner, says: "Kill it! kill it! it is the very thing that has been eating the leaves and book-marks."

According to a San Francisco paper a new vein in the matter of church fairs has been struck in California. At a festival given by the ladies of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Placerville, in aid of the building fund, a wedding was included in the order of exercises. A charge was made for admission, and the expedition proved successful. What next?

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL, P. Q.
I'N 1857 MR. DECKER purchased the "Albion," which then contained fifty rooms. In 1859 he added a new wing of forty rooms. The steady and rapid increase in the business compelled him, in 1862, to build a second new wing of fifty sleeping rooms, with large dining room, capable of seating two hundred guests. Notwithstanding all this additional accommodation, hundreds of merchants and others, patrons of the "Albion," have been obliged to seek accommodation elsewhere during the Spring and Fall business seasons. Encouraged by the liberal patronage extended to the "Albion," the proprietor has built a third edition of ninety sleeping rooms, large parlors, reading room, office, and bar—fronting on
