Love's Fulfilling

"I have been here six hours already," said Stephen, looking at his watch, "and know something of the situation. But tell me all you can of the fever cases. I am not a novice in fever cases, you know." He listened attentively to the clergyman's story of suffering, jolting down in his notebook the names of the patients, and the most urgent cases. "It is a satisfaction to have it all written out. But first I must see how you are lodged, Louis; you do not want much time of thought, or yourself, I say by your face."

They turned into the gate of the brick rectory, standing in the shadow of the cathedral where Louis Sinclair and several other priests lived and held daily services in the church, spending every available moment in attendance on the sick and dying. Sumptuous fare and lodging were assured, no part of their thoughts; the rectory life was almost ascetic in its frugality, and since the breaking out of the epidemic, none of the hours devoted to rest and freshening had been regularly observed. The doctor noted everything in the rather cheerful abode with his keen, quick eyes, ending with a survey of the slight form before him, and inwardly rejoiced at his coming. It only for the sake of those who would be under the same roof with him.

There had been the warmest friendship between the two men all through their college days, nor in their after life, widely as their paths had diverged, had they fallen out of each other's memory or affection. Stephen Forbes' work was essentially in the world, Louis Sinclair's, apart from it, but in both there was the same true-hearted spirit of self-sacrifice and a generous comprehension of each other's inner nature which beyond difference had power to shake.

A tower of strength Stephen might have been called in these sad days. Busy days succeeded each other, spent in going from bedside to bedside, often beginning with an early morning provision basket on his arm, among those of his poor patients who needed food rather than medicine. To the doctor, however, done must be done with one's own hands; broken nights followed, during which the hand that held the stethoscope was untouched, yet through it all the doctor was always the same, calm, cheerful, energetic, sincerely interested in his brother physicians with his buoyant spirits and inexhaustible vitality, keeping a watchful eye upon the epidemic, and the needs of his spiritual friends, and insidiously, with his half-languishing boyish enthusiasm, upon the regular hours and living on more generous fare.

"The doctor of the soul have need of strong bodies," he said. "It is quite a mistake to imagine the contrary." "You should have been one of us, Dr. Forbes," said one of the clergyman. "Well, our work is not so far apart, I trust, though yours is the harder, because the more active a life is, the more it becomes self-supporting. But praying and working go together, in some measure, with us, as I believe with you."

"One of our most untiring doctors is a woman," said Mr. Sinclair. "I am not surprised at that. When I remember the women I have seen in the medical schools abroad, I can readily believe anything of their courage and endurance. I have not met this one of whom you speak as yet, but for devotion and fortitude one need not look beyond the Sisters of Mercy. What noble, unselfish, Christ-like lives!"

On the evening of the day, Dr. Stephen was hastening to the last of a long list of patients. It was rainy and damp, and the darkening streets were filled with the piles of burning bedding before the stricken houses. Carts were driven by, loaded with rough boards, boxes, and nine sometimes in a cart, a nurse hurrying along in front of Stephen, stopped the driver of one of these to ask her way to a certain house.

"But I've got the man here in his coffin," said the driver, with a jerk of his whip over his shoulder towards the boxes. "All but the tenderest hearts grow callous in the midst of such dreadful scenes," thought the doctor, with a sigh. His own was very heavy as he entered the door of the house of which he was in search. It was a new patient, and he was very late in reaching her. As he looked in at the open parlour door, he found he had been forestalled. A little woman, dressed not in the Sisters' robe and black veil which had become so familiar to his eyes, but in ordinary street attire, was standing by the bedside of the sick person. She looked up as he entered, with a quick glance of surprise. There was a mutual start of recognition.

"Dr. Mary?" "Dr. Forbes?" They shook hands cordially, but it was no time for personal inquiries. "I have been detained," said Stephen. "It is well the tell into your hands. The little woman shook her head sadly, murmured a few words in a low tone, motioning him to step nearer the bed; then, as he bent over the patient, she gave a few clear, concise directions to the nurse in charge, and with a last glance at the unconscious head on the pillow, followed the doctor from the house.

"No, there is no hope, I fear," she said, as they stepped out into the heavy air, which seemed refreshing after the reverent atmosphere. "I have learned that there is no trusting to signs in these fever cases, I think sometimes a patient is doing well, and before I can see him again he is dead. At another time I think there is cause for great alarm, and the patients recover."

"It can only be feeling one's way," said Stephen, "but how much of our work is that? You have been here, then, for some time?"

"All through the fever. Did you not know that Memphis was my home? I came here at once after leaving Vienna, and have practised here ever since."

"And you meet with recognition, I trust?" Stephen asked, with interest. "You deserve it after your brave struggle abroad."

"It comes slowly," she answered, with a quiet smile. "We have a very low level in our Southern cities, you know. But my lot is cast here, and, such as it is, poor Memphis shall have the best I can give her."

"What she most needs," said Stephen, energetically, "is a better drainage. What we are doing now is only a sop to Cerberus. I have no faith in any remedy till the root of the matter is reached; we are only smothering it till then. Enterprize, I suppose, we should hardly lose after such a terrible visitation, unless there is a powerful lift from outside; but that, please God, there shall be when I have seen this struggle through."

"You mean to stay through it, then?" said Dr. Mary, her face brightening. "I couldn't leave," said Stephen simply. They walked on together, the doctor's stalwart figure towering above the little woman at his side, whom he looked down with a friendly smile in the dark eyes which gave so much light and sweetness to her face. Clara Martin was small, but robust in frame, with quick, restless movements, a fresh color in her cheeks, a decided mouth, and a peculiar resolution in the low, clear tones, as well as in the motions of her firm, small hands. They parted at the gate of her home with a quiet, friendly pressure of the hand, that told of hearty sympathy and fellow-feeling for the cause for which the work for each became lighter, because it was shared.

CHAPTER XIII.
So the sultry September days wore on, and all in the fever-stricken city were looking with longing for the spring. But that was only a ray of hope, for each day the list of deaths was as long as ever.

Coming home on Sunday evening, more slowly than usual—the only sign of weariness he ever showed—but not tired or preoccupied to greet every child or sister with a kindly word or smile, Stephen only stopped to throw off his hat and coat, and followed the handful of worshippers into the cathedral, where the evening service was just beginning. There had been a hard, sad day, and there was an unwelcome weight pressing on his heart, but as the dusk fell and the light of his face in his hands, something in the quiet of the church atmosphere stole over his troubled soul with holy calm and sweetness. In the dim light his tall figure was scarcely visible as he knelt, but Louis Sinclair had seen the doctor's tones in response, and felt the nearer to his friend. His own voice had faltered as he began to pray, but the presence of the strong, tender, human heart, apart from it, but in both there was the same true-hearted spirit of self-sacrifice and a generous comprehension of each other's inner nature which beyond difference had power to shake.

"Through love to light! Oh, wonderful the way That leads from darkness to the perfect day."

"Through love to light! Through light, Who art the Love of Love, the Eternal Light of Light."

"The peace of God which passeth all understanding—as the last words died away, Stephen stood waiting for his friend till he came from the vestry, and walked with him the few steps to the house in arm through the light round his shoulders.

"I shall not go out again for an hour," said Louis, "but I will stay with you. I am not going again tonight," said the doctor, quietly. "Come with me, dear Stephen."

"Then you think I have the fever?" said Louis, with a quick glance at his friend's face. "I fear it," Stephen replied, "but I hope always."

ELECTION WRIT ISSUED.
Charlottetown, P. E. I., March 3.—The writ for East Queen's election has been issued. Nominations will be on the 13th and polling on the 20th. The candidates are McKinnon (Liberal) and Martin (Conservative).

HEAD-END COLLISION.—FOUR KNOXVILLE, Tenn., March 2.—In a head-end collision of two freight trains on the Southern Railway near Knoxville, Tenn., four trainmen were killed, two fatally injured and several seriously hurt. None of those aboard the trains escaped uninjured.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.
San Francisco, March 2.—Adolph Bietz shot and killed a woman known as Rose Thomas, or Rose Temple, in a Taylor street lodging-house, at about 10 o'clock last night. He fired three bullets into her head. Bietz then placed the muzzle of his revolver in his mouth and fired a shot into his own head, which will probably prove fatal. Bietz is said to be a German.

FORGER MAKES A RAISE.
Chicago, March 2.—Checks to an estimated face value of $75,000 have been stolen from the various live stock firms with exchange in the city. The thief's operations have covered the period of a week. The banks have been ordered to stop payment on the checks, which range in amount from $100 to $1,000. The checks are regularly issued by the United States Yards and Transit Company, and to cash them it would only be necessary to forge the names of the firms to which they have been given.

EIGHT POUNDS!
Eight pounds of love and laughter, of smiles and sunshine—or? Many a mother can't get the blank out of her mind of puny, wailing children, whose coming brought no gladness to the home. Women who have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription as a pre-natal preparation know that it makes a difference between happy motherhood and a motherhood of mourning and misery. And they know also that happy, healthy mothers have happy, healthy children. "Favorite Prescription" strengthens the whole body and strain of motherhood. It practically does away with the pains of childbirth, gives the mother abundant vitality and enables her to nurse and nourish a healthy child.

The "Favorite Prescription" contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, chloral nor any other narcotic.

"I am mother of six children," writes Mrs. C. A. Briggs, of Millwood, Douglas Co., Oregon, "and always took three or four bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' before confinement and never suffered any trouble. My babies were large and healthy, and I am not a large woman; weigh about 115 pounds. I have had some stomach trouble, but a few doses of 'Golden Medical Discovery' would cure me all right. I am hardly ever without your medicines. They are all the medicine one needs, if taken in time, to keep one in perfect health."

"I feel that I owe my little boy's life to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, as he had convulsions, and everything he ate would bring them on. I commenced to give him the Golden Medical Discovery in ten drops three times a day. Now he is just as healthy a child as can be found and he grows like a weed."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the best laxative for women.

DETROIT, March 3.—President George M. Hendrie, of the Highland Park Jockey Club, has announced the entries to stake events to be decided on the tracks controlled by that organization, and the number of nominations indicates that the trouble between the Turf Congress and Western Jockey Club is not going to interfere with the sport in this part of the country. There is a big improvement over last year, in numbers as well as in the class of horses and turfmen who have made the entries.

Four of the stakes will be decided on the Highland Park track in this city during the running meeting which will be given in June, the dates being June 12 to 25, and the other ten will be run on the track at the 46-day meeting that is to be given there on account of the Pan-American Exposition. The Detroit stakes with 40 the trial Derby, with 45; the Oakland handicap, with 62; and the Highland Park stake, with 58, are the events that will be run in Detroit. PAINING STOMACHS.
There are a whole lot of women (and men, too) whose health would be good if they didn't have trouble with their stomachs. The stomach is the vital part of the body and requires strength. A weak stomach weakens you all over. You may have arms and muscles like a prizefighter, but these muscles won't do you any good if your stomach is weak. Nature supplies in Hutch tablets all that is needed to make the stomach strong, and enables it to properly digest the food. It is chocolate coated. Take one just after you eat. Take two before you go to bed, to move the bowels. Keep up this treatment for a little while and your stomach won't hurt you any more.

If weak women who are pale, bilious, and fretful would take less bitter, sarsaparilla, pills, etc., and use Hutch tablets they would be better off. You simply take one when you feel badly. One gives instant relief. Never take a substitute. A doctor for 10 cents. 200 for $1.00. At all druggists, or Woodward Chemical Co., Toronto, and Buffalo, N.Y.
