FIRST CHURCH IN AMERICA.

About sixty miles from Mexico City, isolated among rugged hills, untouched by modern civilization, only a fragment remaining of its early greatness, is the most-grown town of Tlascala. Four centuries ago it had a population of 400,000, a fiercely independent people who were never subjugated by their powerful neighbors, the Aztecs or Mexicans. The number of its residents at the present day does not exceed 4,000, and the warlike spirit is gone. Gentle in their pride, upright, reserved, and pitifully poor, the descendants of the Tlascalan chieftains live in the traditions of the past, seldom leaving the narrow boundaries of their domain, knowing little, caring naught for the great world beyond.

On the slope of a hill beside the decaying town stands the noble Church of San Francisco, the first church erected by Cortes in Mexico, therefore the earliest monument to the Christian religion in America. Its foundations were begun in 1521, the year which marked the completion of the Conquest.—The Westminster.

"Black bread"—that is, rye bread—is not a famine ration, says the London Lancet, but just as good food as white bread, and the staple food of the staff of life in several civilized countries. There is almost no difference chemically between the two breads, although the wheat contains slightly more gluten. Black bread "keeps fresh"—that is, moist—much longer than white bread. It has a slightly greater irritant effect upon the intestinal canal, which is also an advantage under ordinary circumstances. The whole rye bread, or pumpernickel, is the preferable form.

THE UNIONISTS BACKING DOWN

Will Probably Come to Terms
On the Question of Peers.

London, June 11.—Special correspondence of the Toronto Telegram says: Your average Britisher is the most avowed psychological study on earth. He loves nothing so much as to pretend that he does not want something that he really does want very much indeed, and he knows all the time that he is doing so. He is pretending. Ask why this peculiar mental attitude, and nobody can answer you. The facts are these: The Opposition are in a tight corner. They have run their House of Lords to the death. The difficulty is that the leaders of the Opposition were beaten on the question as to whether the peers should act as they yield, but nevertheless, endeavored to retain their position, and now that the tight corner that they predicted is reached, they have got to pull their followers out somehow. It is, seemingly, essential that they should pretend that they are not in a tight corner; that if they are, they do not particularly care, and that in any not for them to make any overtures.

Unionists Back Down.
The Government are in much the same case. They say, "We are not responsible for the situation—the next move is with the Opposition. And so the sparring has commenced in real earnest. The truth is, the Opposition have got to retreat."

They have, indeed, already commenced to do so. Lord Rosebery has "postponed" his resolutions, and an important member of the Opposition, speaking with authority, has intimated that if the Government will provide a golden bridge, the Opposition leaders will avail themselves of it to measure and alacrity. This is not the precise language that has been used, but it is the exact purport thereof. In short, the Opposition leaders can see no other way out of their tight corner than by a retreat, and they appeal to the Government to render the process as little humiliating as possible.

Asquith Willing.
The Government are quite ready to do what they can in this way, because they know that to stand absolutely would involve a prolonged and most probably bitter conflict, and that everybody, who is anybody, feels it is very desirable to avoid. Accordingly, in response to Mr. Long's intimation that if the Government invite the Opposition to a conference, they will gladly and patriotically take part in it, Mr. Asquith is said to be preparing, if he has not already sent, a private and confidential letter to Mr. Balfour, suggesting that a conference of representative and responsible men sitting on both front benches should be held with a view to reach some common ground.

What are the prospects before such a conference?

Two Points.
The only answer to that question at present is that agreement might be reached on two points, to begin with, viz.: first, that there should be no more interference by the peers with financial bills, and second, that a referendum should be taken with regard to the limitations of the peers' power of veto touching other bills. The points of real difficulty here are as to the first, that of determining the authority that should decide what are financial bills pure and simple, and as to the second, that of determining whether the peers should have the power to decide that their veto should not be over-ridden except by a general election. It will at once be seen that this latter point brings with it embarrassment and difficulty, and this is why it is doubted in some high quarters whether any real advantage can come from the proposed conference.

Opposition Must Accept.
A very sagacious parliamentarian assures me that there can be but one advantage in a conference, and that is that it will enable the Opposition leaders to say they have done their best to save the face of their supporters, but that the Government's proposals will have to be substantially accepted. It is hard to see what other issue there can be, and it is interesting to note that this is practically what is anticipated in the Opposition quarter. The Morning Post is very dubious, indeed, about the conference. It is referred to as a proposal that may gain the Opposition nothing and everything. This, however, it is right to say, is not the attitude of the Opposition leaders. Their attitude is simple and honest enough. It is to save their followers' face as far as possible and by all honorable means to attain a peaceful settlement of the question at issue.

SOCIETY IN DEBT

Condition in Smart World Shown by a London Advertisement.

London, June 20.—The fact that for some time an advertisement has been appearing in a London morning paper offering a sum no less than $5,000 a year to society people who will use their influence in procuring introductions to friends or acquaintances, is a want of money at a moderate rate of interest, tells its own story of the state of debt and insolvency from which many smart folk are suffering today. Women are, perhaps, the most flagrant offenders in this respect, according to a writer in M. A. P., who asserts it would not be by any means difficult to name, haphazard, a dozen or more well-known society hostesses who at the present moment owe considerably more than they can ever hope to pay.

"What is more," he proceeds to say, "under existing circumstances nobody is ashamed of the fact. Nowadays no woman ever dreams of making any secret concerning the fact that she is in debt—except to her own husband. Indeed, it is counted rather chic than otherwise. Listen to the conversation at any women's club, at an afternoon bridge party or a smart at home, and you will hear beautifully dressed women, wearing valuable jewels and indulging in every luxury, complaining of the hardness of their lot and the iniquity of their milliners, dressmakers, jewelers and tradesmen in general in pressing them to pay bills—the total of which they declare is far too exorbitant to be covered by the annual income of a semi-millionaire."

"When an intimation is received from a firm of lawyers who collect accounts for their clients, 'Mi-Lady' has a bad night, and is at her wits' end. But women's wit and women's ingenuity, the consideration of one's bankers and the intervention of one's lawyer, somehow manage to stave off the evil moment."

"Next time such demands mean a visit to one of those obliging money-lenders who so temptingly offer advances in 'strictest secrecy,' their letters, by some evil chance, invariably dropping in on quarter day, sandwiched among a batch of dinner and ball invitations, cards for at home and bridge parties, and a bundle of demands for money from every tradesman who a year ago smilingly took orders for goods that they knew were being sold at prices far too exorbitant to allow of any save the most elastic credit.

"After the money-lender, it is no difficult matter to pocket one's profits and make the acquaintance of those pawnbrokers who, of course, know the names of some of the proudest beauties of today. Each in their turn come obligingly to MI-Lady's aid for the time being."

"Occasionally the heavy cost of credit leaks out. One hears with dismay of the bankruptcy of some famous family; or a whisper of scandal is circulated concerning family jewels which when valued for probate turned out to

POWER FROM THE JORDAN.

A plan for supplying the whole of Palestine with electricity for lighting, heating and cooking purposes is being entered into by a French company, which has its headquarters in Paris.

The power will be supplied by the falls of the Jordan, between the waters of Merom and the Lake of Galilee, where the river descends 70 feet. A generating plant will be erected on the west bank of the river, and will be connected with all the chief towns of the country. Some $1,000,000 will be required for the initial expenses.

It is hoped that in five years the works will be paying well.

The foregoing statement has been sent out from London, Eng., by the Associated Press. It is evidently authentic. Such intimations of the rehabilitation of Palestine have come so frequently of late that they have ceased to be startling. While men are contending that Palestine never can sustain a large population, and that the Jews never will return, God is silently bringing both to pass so rapidly that they will be completed before the sound of unbelieving doubters has ceased to be heard.

Paymasters and commissariat officials of the German army have to undergo a special training in examining the quality of the food supplied to the army.
