Mary Gottschalk lives in Chester, Pa. and her deposition was read, to the effect that her husband, Herman, deserted her in New York in 1886, being engaged in business in Chicago. Most of the judges refuse which he would become a recluse for to permit the evidence of a complainant by deposition, requiring his or her presence and oral evidence in court. Fortunately for the attorney's fee in the Gottschalk above. case, Judge Altgeld was less particular and exacting, accepting the deposition and excusing the complainant from attendance. When in the course of the deposition it developed that Mrs. Gottschalk didn't live but he displayed no nervousness. "The here, Judge Altgeld asked, "How can the queer sickness came on me again about a complainant get a divorce in this State year ago," said he, "and this time I bewhen she isn't a resident of it?"
