A pout upon the red lips of Gerald Sinclair's young wife—unmistakably a poutfor though a wife almost two years, her fond, indulgent husband had for the first time said nay to an openly expressed wish.

The fancy ball of the season, a grand and fashionable assembly, was to take place during his absence—and he had said that he should prefer she would not attend.

She was only 20. Let this much be said in extenuation of the two great tears that rose to the brown eyes and slowly grickled down the pretty face, splash
For the first time she dreaded to meet him—dreaded to look into his kindly, handsome eyes, and read there all his incredulous reproach, mingled, perhaps, with scorn and anger.

The day wore on. Her friend, Mrs. Martin, ran in to scold her for her desertion, but her pale face and trembling tones made good her plea of sudden illness.

A week passed, when one evening, sitting in the twilight, a step sounded close beside. She looked up to discover the count.

Certainly, Niobe had no reason to feel ashamed of this one of her children. But Gerald Sinclair had only stooped and kissed away the glistening drops, in a half hurried manner, perhaps to hide his awakening remorse.

"Never mind, little wife. I'll make it up to you another time."

Then he was gone; but she sat still, turning and re turning her wedding ring, with eyes bent upon it. It was a curious ring—a solid band, set with five large diamonds. It had been her charm, her talisman, not to be taken from her finger until soul and body had parted; but this morning it had lost its obarm. If it failed to scatter the clouds, it failed to bring back the sunshine.

"No, not at all," she continued, raising as mnow under the protection of my own roof."

He was about to enswer, when a latchkey was heard inserted in the outside door. In an instant he had sprung into some place of concealment, but the fact that he was near lent to the young wife a sudden courage, born of the moment's desperation. Her husband, entering, approached her, but she motioned him back.

"Gerald," she said, "I have a bitter confession to make. It is fitting that you should hear it now."

He listened, with arms folded across his breast, while she told him all the story of that fated night.

"And is this all?" he questioned bitterly, when she had paused.

"No, not at all," she continued, raising

She was almost tempted to obey it, but she had promised Ellen, and after all, she had heard-it was well for young wives to usert themselves.

"Children," said the fond mother, pushing them away, "run over yonder where the goat carriages are and play until I send for you."

An hour later and, on the Count Belconi's arm, she entered upon the brilliant scene. So far he had not even seemed surious to ascertain her identity. She experienced at this a singular sense of re-

"You look more like a nun than a fairy—tather like one who had foresworn the vanities of the world, than a siren to tempt men to their destruction," said a voice close to her, "though to the latter I know no one more fitted." "Sir!" she exclaimed indignantly, re-

Denial was useless.

"Since you know me, then," she said, "we will not further play a part. To the others we are marks: to ourselves we are ourselves."

"Au! madame," he whispered, "let us rather say to the world we are ourselves to each other we are a mask. Can men, think you, look coldly on such beauty as you possess? Can—"

Indignant and alarmed, she checked his further speech by starting forward to escape him. His hand closed on hers as in a vice. She wrenched it from him, sprang among a crowd of maskers, and so

"Call a carriage for me," she directed.

Ten minutes later she was within her own home. Her first impulse was to tear off the hated costume which had caused her such trouble; her next to throw her-self on the bed and sob out her excitement and contrition. The morning sun, streaming into her room, awoke her.

With a shudder, she remembered the events of the past night. She looked down at her hand—the hand which had been solly and he another's touch—as though in olluted by another's touch—as though in one way she expected to find the contam-nation branded on its soft white surface. It was all unmarred; but— She looked gain—she rubbed her eyes and looked

"And is this all?" he questioned Ditterly, when she had paused.

"No, not at all," she continued, raising her voice. "My confession has another witness, who has forced his hated presence again upon me. The Count Belzoni is here again, Gerald."

As she spoke she drew aside the curtain, but the form she expected to disclose was gone, the open window attesting to its flight.

"You're not going, my dear!" exclaimed Mrs. Martin, bursting in upon her friend on the morning of the ball. "And why not?"

"Gerald is away," replied Mrs. Sinclair, with some little show of wifely dignity, as though the fact were in itself sufficient explanation.

"And why need that make any difference?" pursued Mrs. Martin, a bewitching little widow some few years her friend's senior. "I will share my escort with you —Count Belzoni!"

Sophie Sinclair looked up amazed. She knew that the man mentioned had but lately gained entree into society, and knew also that her husband disliked and distrusted him.

Once or twice she had seen his eye fixed admiringly upon herself, and had felt somewhat as the bird might feel beneath the basilist glare of the serpent.

"Well, why don's you asswer?" continued Mrs. Martin. "Will you go?"

"No. no," she replied, trying to speak with firm decision. "Besides, I do not think that Gerald admires the count."

"Prejudice, my dear; all prejudice. The count is one of the most charming and agreeable men I know. Indeed, I think I should be canouized for my wilningness to share his attentions, especially as I have heard him say all manner of pretty things about you."

malady. This is none the less starting when it is remembered that not five per cent of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished, the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star. Guelph, Ontario. The undersigned respectfully announce that on the 9th ay of April, 1884, Joseph F. Rainer dissolved partnership with Frank Sweetnam and John Hazelton, as piano manufacturers, and that said Joseph F. Rainer, in connection with his son, will continue to manufacture the original cross-scale Pianos, of which the said Joseph F Rainer is the sole inventor.

These Pianos have now been before the public for 22 years, and have always ranked among the very best, and are celebrated for quality of tone, great power and durability of act on, prompt elastic touch, fine finish and elegant style of case, combined with every known improvement. The most complete and unbroken list on record, embracing a period of 30 years, and made up of 28 first prizes, medals and diplomas received at the principal exhibitions in Canada—Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, Hamilton and London. At the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia, in 1876, we secured a redal and diploma for our piano. The great favor with which the cross-scale pianos have been received for so long a period, and the reputation they bear, has induced others to imitate them. We therefore caution intending purchasers and dealers wishing to obtain the original cross-scale piano to see that the name of "Rainer & Son" is on each instrument. We make the Upright and Square Grand Pianos.
