WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19th, 1893. The Dominion Atlantic Railway.

The announcement made in the city papers on Saturday last, that the Windsor & Anna polis and Western Counties railways are to be consolidated under one management, will we feel assured, be hailed with pleasure by the people of this county. General Manage Campbell, who has just arrived in Halifax from England, where he has been spending view with reporters of the Halifax papers The union of these two companies and the consolidation of the lines controlled by them giving a through railway from Halifax to Yarmouth under one management is at last about to be realized. Two government have at different times attempted this, but both times the scheme failed of success Now, without any assistance from the gov ernment, and mainly through the instrunentality of the energetic manager of the Windsor and Annapolis, this long desired The old names are to be discarded, and the Dominion Atlantic Railway is to be the Previous to his time the managem appeared to have but one object-to grind the largest amount possible out of its patrons policy of increasing its business by reducing reights, or of attracting and creating traffic by advertising and providing modern facilities and conveniences was never dreamed of able to hold but a small part of the trade of this valley. During the last two years change. Splendid new cars, fully equal parlor and dining cars added, and lastly the famous "Flying Bluenose," as we supposed, made the improvements complete. Not so, however, for Mr. Campbell saw the advantage of having one through line from Halifax to Yarmouth, and he straightway set about

Drainage the Great Need.

In the local legislature last week Mr. W. Cameron said that agriculture was the pursuit of the larger part of the population and was unquestionably important. Outside of some of the favored counties the mass of the farmers had no money or very little. Years ago, shortly after the woods were cut down, when the ground had its original fertility, everything went all right. Since then the people had taken everything out of the soil that they could in order to support and educate their families, and they had Impoverished the land by overcropping. When the soil was newly cleared it had natural drainage and grain and grasses found plenty of nourishment. Now, in consequence of the hardening of the subsoil, there was no natural drainage, and if anything was to be raised, the fields must be drained. He had believed that the season could be lengthened.

When the soil was newly cleared it had natural drainage and grain and grasses found plenty of nourishment. Now, in consequence of the hardening of the subsoil, there was no natural drainage, and if anything was to be raised, the fields must be drained. He believed that the season could be lengthened from two to three weeks by underdraining. This would cost money and could only be done with help from the government, but he done with help from the government, but he believed that there was a way of doing it without putting the province any more in debt or diverting a dollar from any of the grants now given. The government could borrow money at four per cent. interest and loan it in small sums to the farmers for drainloan it in small sums to the farmers for drainage purposes at a rate of interest that would enable them to establish a sinking fund. The increased productiveness of the farms would easily enable the farmers to pay the government eight or nine per cent. for the money, which at the end of twenty-one years, would extinguish the debt. Farmers never be called upon to p.y the principal sum which would be paid off in this way. He thought that this was a perfectly feasible plan, and that if it were adopted the farmers would be benefitted, while the government could lose nothing. There was no use in attempting to fertilize undrained land.

At times the wind blew a hurricane, carrying with it gusts of heavy snow in such dense quantities as to make outdoor pedestrianism almost an impossibility. It is estimated that at least a foot of snow fell. The storm came from the northwest and swept along the Bay of Fundy with frightful velocity. It is feared that many of the vessels passing up and down the Bay may have been caught, and that severe losses will be reported. TREMENDOUS STORM. - Yes'erday witness
