

to happen was not there to let it happen again, which we could not say in the case of some industrial companies which were subsidized under the previous administration.

This element of ad hoc policy of all governments both at the federal and provincial level as it relates to financial institutions is something we as Canadians surely cannot countenance for much longer. I think, of course, of the several cases in my own Province of Ontario. The names Seaway Trust and Greymac will ring a bell. I think the related flipping of residential apartment units within Metropolitan Toronto, the enormous paper profits generated and the subsequent and possibly resultant stripping of the assets of the companies involved, shows there has been a general weakness in the regulations of financial institutions in Canada which, even with the Government proposing and expounding a climate of deregulation, surely must give us indication that in the future we will need far stronger regulations than we have had in the past.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister could tell us what the business of the House will be for Thursday, that is the day after tomorrow, June 25, and even for Friday—tomorrow being the national holiday of Quebecers and other French-speaking Canadians, the House will not be sitting—so we may prepare ourselves.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, Thursday the House will resume the capital punishment debate, I think it should be a normal day. As to Friday, the matter is under discussion with the other House leaders and our caucus.
