pared with the valuable salmon, cod, halibut and other fisheries, which, if extensively cultivated as they should be, would yield surprising returns for all necessary expenditure. If all other nations have privileges of sealing in Bering Sea, they will soon discover means by which to obtain possession of a good part of its other products, or if that is not practicable, their presence in the waters will greatly interfere with the propagation of those more numerous, and consequently more valuable denizens of the sea. Other large animals, the walrus, whale, sea otter and sea lion, who are periodic sojourners in that neighborhood, are extremely timid and wary and must therefore suffer from the presence of the sealing vessels, and their numbers will soon be lessened, if they are not entirely exterminated from their haunts, thereby depriving the natives on some of the remote and lonely islands, of the greater part of their livelihood. It must naturally follow that with greatly augmented forces toward the securing of seal skins and the frightening away, if not the capture, of those other mammals, together with the unwonted interference with the food fishes and the fisheries for the same
