

tion, and renders it illustrious in the View of Mankind.

These are the People in whose Defence you are now glittering in Arms. Nor are they Strangers and Foreigners you know not, and with whom you have no natural Affinity or Connection, but your own Countrymen and fellow Subjects. Many of them your affectionate Relatives; Fathers, Brothers, Wives, Children, intimate Friends and Companions, with whom you have passed many familiar and delightful Hours, receiving from them as they from you, innumerable Tokens of Kindness and Love.

These are all looking to you for Protection; all expecting it from you. All rejoicing at the Sight of so many martial Habits and intrepid Faces. All exulting
