wishy-washy cosmopolitanism which sees no difference between a Hun and a gentleman, or with the syndicalist brain that sees everywhere nothing but antagonism of employer and employee. Why is it, then, that Quebec stands the ton.

The answer is that Bordenism has done it. The pact between Borden and Bourassa in 1911 encouraged a sectional aloofness in Quebec, put the seal on a nationalism which is nothing but provincial and racial selfishness, differing from Prussianism only in its non-military character. Quebec Nationalism, looking out greedily for sectional advantage, concentrated in self. finding high rewards for this ultraegoism, what can it know of patriotism or of the still higher spirit of humanity that has drawn so many powers to the defence of Serbia and Belgium or of their own citizens murderously assailed by the Teuton pirates?

These delegates, who represent the vast majority of organized socialism in Germany see fit to offer a peace differing from that outlined or hinted by the German Government at one time and another only in that it would be even more disadvantageous to the Entente Allies.

They insist upon no indemnity for Belgium! They are described as "ardent supporters of the kaiser's government."
They seem to be more ardent than the chief criminal himself, and indistinguishable from the pan-German faction except in their vulgar talk of "comradeship" between Belgium and Austria and in their perfunctory party cry for international peace and disarmament after the war. Germany would be likely to disarm if she got a peace right now to suit her!

These German workingmen and professors masquerading as a cosmopolitan and peace party are the kaiser's tools.

Their words are his words with little activation. It's rather a curious situation.

PECULIAR TOLERANCE.

F ORTY thousand tons of sugar, bound for Britain, have been sent to the bottom of the sea by submarines in ten days, and a representative of the British food control department says that this eliminates any hope of an increased sugar supply for the people.

COMPETITORS. By Jane Osborn.

When Edith Day made up her mind to pay for the expenses of her senior year at college by running a summer gift shop, she went straight to Dean's Bay and leased a loft in a weather-beaten shack of a building, once a fisher's cabin, that provided the desired tone of nicture suggests for such a year. fisher's cabin, that provided the desired tone of picturesqueness for such a venture. It was not far from the promenade that led past the fashionable hotels, the Casino and the larger cottages, and the owner agreed to construct a rustic gateway and a new board path from the promenade to the cabin.

During the winter Edith made a really clever collection of trifles for sale in her shop, and with what capital she had left she laid in a supply of stock in her shop, and with what capital she had left she laid in a supply of stock in trade, painted a vivid sign in greens and blues and repaired to Dean's Beach to have a week to make ready before the season opened.

In order to effect every possible economy, Edith had arranged to sleep in her loft—having one end partitioned off and divided into a bedroom and living-room. The first night of her arrival it was small wonder that she off and divided into a bedroom and living-room. The first night of her arrival it was small wonder that she was lonely in her little shack by the ocean, where she could hear the everlasting pounding of the breakers and see through her narrow dormer window the slow, regular flashes of the lighthouse on the far-off seascape, apparently as relentless and incessant as the waves themselves. But when morning came it brought a bright flood of sunlight and a blue sky that drove away all thought of timidity. The first thing that Edith did that morning was to go out to the little rustic gateway, mount on a rickety old chair she had found in the cabin, and hammer her blue and green sign into place. The sign simply said: "The Fishnet. Goods for Men and Bays a Specialty."

This done, Edith returned to her shop, and by dint of much inexpert effort uncovered the packing cases and boxes in which the supplies had been sent to her. Then she set to work inversely to

In one little showcase she arranged a collection of cuff links, scarfpins and other knicknacks for men that she had a collection of cuff links, scarfpins and other knicknacks for men that she had agreed to sell on commission. She hardly had enough capital to buy them outright. In a bookcase she had a collection of books—handbooks for yachtsmen, a short course in boxing and the art of jiu jitsu were among them. There were all sorts of blank books, fountain pens and desk accessories, but all of the control of ten, a short course in boxing and the rt of jiu jitsu were among them. What especially delighted Edith and what filled her with glee as she sat before her fireplace that second evening, after having hastily finished her lonely supper in the adjoining living room, was the fact that, as a result of the trip she had taken along the room, was the fact that, as a result of the trip she had taken along the promenade that day, she knew there were no other gift shops within a half-mile.
