TO REMOVE RUST-STAINS FROM MATTING.

Cover the stain with paper and place warm iron on this. When the spot is warm dip a glass rod in a bottle of muriatic acid and go over the rust-spot with it, wetting every part with the acid. The spot will turn a bright yellow. Instantly wash it with an old toothbrush dipped in boiling water:

CEMENT FOR MENDING CHINA.

Expensive articles are sometimes mended by riveting the pieces together, but it is difficult to get a cement that will resist long exposure to water. Articles that are mended with pure white lead, or with a mixture of powdered asbestos and waterglass, will hold together if washed with care—that is, washed and wiped quickly. Articles mended in this manner will not bear soaking in water. Rub a thin coat of the best white lead on the broken edges, then press together and tie in position with bands of cloth. Keep the articles in a dry place for six weeks before using.

Water to use for the flavoring of other preserves; or it may be put aside for ginger extract. Weigh the ginger, and to each pound allow a pound of sugar and half a plut of boiling water. Put the sugar and tater into a preserving-kettle; bring to boiling point and skim. Put in the ginger and cook slowly until each plece is perfectly transparent. The ginger may now be put away the same as other preserves, or drained free from the syrup, cut into thin slices and rolled in granulated sugar. The syrup may be used for flavoring other preserves.

HOW TO LAY A MATTING.

If you have a good quality of matting and will follow these instructions you will have no trouble: Measure the floor accurately. Now measure the matting, allowing a few inches on each length for turning in at each end. Where he piece come on the least exposed part of the room. Bind the cut edge with a plain carpet binding of about the same shade, or, if you cannot set, that, use strips of buff window shades if you have some old ones. Cover the floor with paper; lay the matting, one strip at a time, tacking it the mean time, one strip at a time, tacking it the strip, having the two edges come next to the will. Use matting tacks.

TO CLEAN ZINC.

Zinc is one of the most difficult metals to keep bright and stainless. It can be cleaned with sulphuric acid, but the greatest care must be observed in using this strong chemical. If you will do the work yourself, or have it done under your personal supervision, you will find this method satisfactory. Have the sinc well washed with soap and hot water, that no trace of grease may remain on it; wipe dry. Make two maps by fastening pieces of cloth on two sticks; have on hand two palls of clean cold water and a cleaning cloth. Thus the bugbear of the earlier company no longer scares anybody; it has been subjugated and laid low. Altogether, according to American engineers, the canal across the isthmus is at this time two-fifths completed. Something has been done the entire length, $4,000,000 cubic metres of earth having been excavated, and for fourteen miles from the Pacific side the canal is full of water and needs only to be dredged deeper.
