"Col. Steele is entirely mistaken and labors under a misapprehension. When the idea of Canada raising any men for this body was first spoken of, the colonial office intimated that if the dominion would raise 1,000 the imperial government would forward them by a special transport, but that if the number was less than the 1,000 then they would be forwarded by squads as occasion might present itself. This offer was made through the colonial office to the governor general.

Thes; men have been raised and that is all that the government knows about it. His excellency has not requested the government to authorize the raising of any more, and had it been the intention of the imperial government to seek a further number of recruits from Canada the request would have come from him, as did the first.
