he wrote The Prisoner of Chillon by Lamorne) and the castle stands on a little point, with the water of the lake lapping its grim sides.
The exterior is most impressive, solid masonry, strong & square, pointed towers and arched gateway, here and there ivy grows on the walls and all about it is an air of antiquity as if it had not changed since the time of the unhappy Ben-nevis. Look at it from below and see:
