"Better come, Miss Lilian. You'll be sorry you didn't. Old Jack hadn't to beg and pray like this one time."

"Well, well," she said, as if yielding to the old favorite's grumbling, "don't get out of temper, Jack, and I'll come."

Mr. Clifford gave her his hand. She thanked him demurely and sat down.

Directly the boat's bow had touched the bank, he sprang out and hurried away in the direction of the wood.

Lilian, trembling with fear and a thousand conflicting emotions, burst into tears, and old Jack, astounded at this conclusion of the trip, stood staring with open mouth.

conclusion of the trip, stood staring with open mouth.

She entered the hall by the side way, and hoped to steal to her room unperceived, but as she passed the dining room door it opened suddenly and Sir Ralph came out.

Halph came out.

She sprang towards him, but stopped suddenly, terrified and aghast at the fearful look upon his face. She had never seen it there before and the remembrance of it remained with her to her driven described.

It was not rage, contempt or despairing sorrow, but a commingling of the three with a preponderance of the form-three with a preponderance of the former.

"Is it you, Lilian?" he said, regarding her with a stern and heavy frown.

"I thought it might be Mr. Clifford.

He pronounced the tutor's name with an emphatic hatred that drove the blood from her heart, as if she had been stabbed with a knife.

"Oh, papa, tell me, what has happened?" she cried, throwing her arms round his neck, and searching his dark face with her love-keen eyes.

"Nothing I can tell you, Lilian," in a wild, set voice. "Go to your room and don't leave it until I give you permission."

"But, papa, papa! Tell me! Oh, you will break my heart! Tell me!"

"I cannot, I will not! I will not insult you, my darling!" he cried, wildly, unfastening her arms from about his neck and pointing to the stairs. "Go to your room, and do not leave it, I command you."

Lilian, petrified at the harah tone and harsher look, bowed her head meekly and paced slowly up the stairs.

Before she had got out of hearing, she heard a man's voice in the room Sir Ralph had entered.

It was Mr. Besant's.

Love Finds the Way

She took her songs and chose a soft, mournful one, infusing into the words an intensity of imploring expression that brought his hand to his face again.

"You sang that perfectly," he said. "I can suggest no alteration that would be an improvement."

He rose. Still seated, she turned to him.

"You are not strong enough yet," she said, entire said, gently, raising her eyes, full of compassion, to his wan face.

He met the glance in all its intensity, and was nearly overcome.

"I am strong enough," he said, almost with a groan; "but—but you make me weak."

The words seemed wrung from him, and without waiting for her to pass him, he walked quickly from the room, leaving the beautiful girl with a flushed face and a heart beating wildly with a tumultuous passion that frightened her.

Mr. Clifford did not appear again that day, and for the rest of the week Miss Lucas in the dinipute of alternative and the hall, and with a dogged air of independence, which was always assumed when under the roottree of Rivershall, announced that the boat was ready for Mr. Clifford and that hey Jack, was waiting.

Mr. Clifford came down, and. after thanking old Jack for the inquiries he had made during his illness, accompanied him to the boat. At the bank stood Lilian.

"What a beautiful morning for your trip," she said, with the slight flush that always beautified her face when meeting him. "I almost envy you the row; the river looks so smooth and beautiful."

"Why don't you come, too?" grunted old Jack; 'there'll be two of you from the books, then."

Thy love has many a lighted path No outward eye can trace;

As in a secret place.
He turned to Sir Ralph, as the baronet, in a voice low with suppressed passion, said:
"I have sent for you, sir, to demand an explanation. If you have one to offer, give it readily. I advise you."
He paused, his hand clinched upon the table, his hard-featured face looking harder than ever, confronting the slightly surprised, but very calm, one of the tutor. "However willing I may be to give you!"

But Mr. Clifford, though he looked very white, did not retire an inch. Perhaps he was petrified with astonishment.

Mr. Besant, not from any good will for the "tutor fellow," stepped in before the infuriated baronet, and touched his upvaised arm.

infuriated baronet, and touched his upraised arm.
"Be calm, sir, I implore you, or," he added, in a whisper, "he will get the better of us yet."
"You are right, Harry—you are right," muttered Sir Raiph, returning to his old position by the table, and passing his hand across his brow with a groan of rage and impatience.

The tutor was the first to speak again. "Sir Ralph," he said, in slow, distinct tones, "I am here to answer any accusation you may bring against me, and I swear before Heaven to answer it truthfully; but I will reply to no indefinite charges, be they aimed against me by this gentleman—for whose ill will toward my I am at a loss to account—or any other."

SHEA SENTENCED.

Labor Chief Sent to Prison For Attempted Murder.

New York, July 23.—Cornelius P. Shea, the former president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, who was found guilty on Wednesday of attempting to murder Alice Walsh, a former Chicago waitress, with whom he had lived, was sentenced to-day to not less than five nor more than 25 years in prison.

than five nor more than 25 years in prison.
"Your services for humanity are urged in your behalf," said the court, "because you have been active in the affairs of organized labor. There is a prejudice against organized labor, because such men as you dominate it with your brutal methods and your coarse, offensive personality, and a part of the community has come to look upon organized labor as being composed of brutes, and securing their victories by brutal methods. But that is all wrong. I believe I am helping the cause of organized labor by ridding it of one such as you, and sending you to State prison."
