GIVE US A TRIAL.

All the Small Measures Possible.

By RUTH CAMERON.

We were talking the other day about some pictures we had sent to the developer and were expecting back by every mail, and in the course of the conversation I asked a neighbor if she ever took pictures.

"Oh, no," she said, "I never have been one for fads of any sort." She seemed to take pride in the statement. I wondered why. Is it something to be proud of that one shuts off the sources of harmless legitimate pleasure? For myself, I love to have as many small pleasures in my life as I have a right to have.

Take the Fad of Photography. Take the fad of photography. What an interest it gives to life! You see so much more of the world about you because you have the photographic eye, and you learn to see groupings and bits of composition that will make good pictures. You snap the pictures and you send them away, and then you have the pleasant anticipation of the day they will come back. Every mail may contain them, which gives the postman's visit much more interest to you. When they come, you enjoy looking at them and showing them to other people who are also interested in photography or in the individual subject (I assume you are the sort of person who knows enough to confine his audience to people who are really interested). Then you put them into books and as the years go by you look over these books again, and light up and vivify your memories by them, or hunt for some special picture that illustrates some story you are telling, or some particular locality that some one is interested in.

This is only a Symbol. I have said so much about photography because it is a fad with whose contribution to the interestingness of life I am familiar, but I am not trying to urge the practise of it upon you (though I think I shall be doing you a favor if I direct your attention that way), only using it as a symbol of all the pleasure and interest a small fad can bring into your life.

And after all, isn't it these small humdrum, commonplace little pleasures whose sum make up the largest part of our joy in life? Isn't it small pleasures that fill up the nooks and crannies where loneliness and boredom would otherwise lurk? How such little pleasures light up a day.

Your favorite rose brings forth its first blossom, the postman brings you a magazine with the latest installment of an interesting serial in it, a friend invites you in to listen to a new record, you hear an interesting story about some people you are interested in—these are all little things, but how they enrich and light up a day!

Big adventures, great events, special pleasures cannot come every day, but the anticipations and thrills of small pleasures can, and the wise man or woman has as many of them as he legitimately can in his life.

BLUE LANGUAGE.

The war has made us more profane, which gives my gentle soul a pain. In olden times we used to swear when sick or burdened down with care; if in the darkness we arose, and on the door jamb broke a nose, we'd spring some red-hot parts of speech which made the weary well-in-screach. But when a stern occasion called for language that would scorch and scald, our speech was soothing and refined, the output of the placid mind. But now we cuss the whole day long, and no one seems to think it wrong. The stories in our public prints are full of words of lurid tints, and even the masters shock the pews, the sort of adjectives they use. Profanity was always coarse; and now it's losing all its force, when it is sprung in constant flow—it lacks the pep of long ago. In war it may have been all right, this damning everything in sight, for we were racked by dread and doubt, and cusswords seemed to help us out. But now that peace is come again, let's be polite and godly men, and quit this foolish, stupid stunt of pushing swear words to the front.

A New Delicacy.

There is no accounting for tastes, and that is being shown every day in the week in some sphere of life. In the fish industry one has only to turn to those persons whose chief delight is to gorge themselves with a dish of devilfish. Some persons call it devilfish, in the East it is sometimes classed as sea cat, while in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico, where it is sometimes taken in great quantities it is called octopus or cuttle. It makes very little difference what the name may be, the fish is considered a delicacy by Italians, Greeks, Japanese and Chinese. Five or six years ago devilfish sold in the Vera Cruz markets for about 35 cents per pound. Now, with the additional high cost of living, it is bringing higher prices, sales during the present week being made at 75 cents per pound, wholesale. Who says fish is high in price when devilfish bring more money in the wholesale market than any other variety outside of Kennebec salmon when it first comes to market.—N. Y. Fishing Gazette.

Prophecy Came True.

Under the heading, "The Fulfillment of a Prophecy of Bebel," the Berner Tagwacht of Dec. 13 points out that twenty-one years ago August Bebel, then leader of the German Social Democracy, warned the German nation that in case another war came it had no prospects of winning a decisive victory. In speaking in the Reichstag on the budget on December 15, 1897, Bebel said: "No, Herr von Kardorf, we shall have to be glad to keep what we have, even in the Government circles, no one thinks that, even as victors in such a war, would we gather in billions in the shape of war indemnities from our opponents, as was the case in 1870. Such a thing is simply impossible. At all events, in the next war we shall have to pay the war costs ourselves, and be happy if nothing worse happens to us. And we shall again have to take care of the wounded and the surviving relatives of the dead ourselves, without being aided by French or Russian billions." The Swiss newspaper remarks that Bebel's prophecy has come true, "in a much more fearful measure than Bebel imagined, or could have imagined."—N. Y. Times.

Fishery the Mainstay.

No matter what may come or what may go, there is no getting over the fact that the principal asset of Newfoundland is her inexhaustible fisheries, and these must be nurtured and developed before everything else; and as the fisheries are the first commercial asset of the Colony, the fishermen, who at the risk of their lives prosecute that great industry, should be looked upon with pride by the public and encouraged and protected by all Governments. It is to the fisheries and fishermen of the country that Newfoundland owes everything that she has had or all that she will ever have of wealth and prosperity. Every precaution should be taken and no expense spared to protect and develop our fisheries—the greatest marine industry in the world.—Canadian Motor Boat.

Just Folks

THE GEB RETURNS TO PRIVATE LIFE. I've been a gob for eighteen months. I've sailed the rolling sea. But I am homeward bound to-day, for the navy's through with me. I got my papers yesterday, my ticket and my pay. And I'm headed straight for a job on land and there I'm going to stay. But I'm thinking now, as I ride the train with a grin upon my face, of the other chap who'll be passing coal to-morrow in my place.

I've loaded coal in old New York and I've eluded coal in Brest. I've shoveled fuel north and south and I've shoveled east and west. I've stowed it deep in the bunkers dark and I've held my place in line. And cursed as only a sailor can each "No, Herr von Kardorf, we shall have to be glad to keep what we have, even in the Government circles, no one thinks that, even as victors in such a war, would we gather in billions in the shape of war indemnities from our opponents, as was the case in 1870. Such a thing is simply impossible. At all events, in the next war we shall have to pay the war costs ourselves, and be happy if nothing worse happens to us. And we shall again have to take care of the wounded and the surviving relatives of the dead ourselves, without being aided by French or Russian billions." The Swiss newspaper remarks that Bebel's prophecy has come true, "in a much more fearful measure than Bebel imagined, or could have imagined."—N. Y. Times.

I've had my bouts with "Jimmy Legs." I've sweated and I've toiled. I've knuckled down for the sake of peace to a C. P. O. hard bottled. I've stood my watch when the night was cold and out in the blazing sun. But the sweetest joy that I've ever known was the time they said, "You're done." So let me smile as I'm homeward bound, let me look at the trees and grass. For I'm nearing the port that I've dreamed about where there is no coal to pass.
