SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Armistice Day has come and gone, its patriotism, still remembrance of two minutes silence was observed by railway and transportation companies. At Dominion Square, near the Windsor station, a cenotaph was unveiled by General Sir Arthur Currie and Admiral Sims of US. Navy, who was so prominently connected with the work of American warships in European waters during the war, was also present and gave a fitting address. Thousands of people thronged the square, and many wreaths were laid at the foot. Most pathetic of all was one from a lady in memory of her husband and two brothers.

Admiral Sims has met a hearty reception here at the various functions he has attended. He has a fund of good stories, and one of the best of them, which will appeal alike to Britishers and Americans, but more especially the latter, is as follows:-An English family left the British Isles to settle in the States. Telling of their final hours before departure the head of the family recounted the good-night prayer of the youngest MUTT AND JEFFmember, who ended her usual petition with: "Good-bye God, we're going to America." When the laugh raised had subsided an American interjected. "You have made a slight mistake in punctuating that sentence; what your little girl evidentally said was: "Good; by God we're going to America."

Quite a little furore has been created during the past week by the arrest of Mr. John Roberts, the editor of a weekly sheet called the "Axe," on a charge of breach of privilege of the Provincial House, because of an article recently published by him in which he hinted that two members of the Provincial Parliament knew something of the facts of the murder of a girl Planche Garneau, which occurred about 2 years ago. Roberts was arrested and brought before the Bar of the House, but refused to name any one of the legislators as connected with his article, and as a result a Bill committing him to prison for a year has been passed. In addition he has to face a charge of criminal libel before the courts. There is a good deal of sympathy with Roberts manifested

I can only claim to state things as I see them with no monopoly of opinion. That reminds me that owing to moving I was never able to reply to the Chiropractor who became so indignant at a previous article of mine. I regretted that his sense of humor was evidently in abeyance at the time, for I did not sug gest, as "Jack Canuck" did in an article last week, that Chiropractors "should be hung."
