Wisdom From the Reviews

THE INWARD LIFE. Men's inward life has not become on the whole, more joyous and more able than it was 2,000 or 10,000 years ago, and if emphasis is not laid on something besides intelligence, his life will never become richer, fuller, and more joyous.—W. Tudor Jones, R.A., in "Discovery."

Books Resurrected. Doubtless to be a true Christian among books is to keep a hopeful spirit in the face of all that seems blank and drear. This generation in England has witnessed the raising of several books from death, notably Melville's "Moby Dick," Gogol's "Dead Souls," Charles Doughty's "Diary in Arabia." Many books, no doubt, are dead for all eternity, but of a few in every age it may be said simply: they sleep.—Stephen Graham in the "English Review."

Romance. One side of romance is nothing more than the discovery of the way in which things that have never touched one's own life, which have no interest in themselves, are intimately bound up with the existence of other people.—Edmund Candler in "Blackwood's Magazine."

A Gentleman. A fine gentleman, in the true and natural sense of the expression, is, pace Pope, a nobler work of God than an honest man; for the greater includes the less. A gentleman is necessarily an honest man, but not every honest man is a gentleman, and still less a "fine" gentleman.—H. C. Irwin in the "English Review."

Lord Morley. Scruple in speech is a fine quality, especially when one has command, as Morley had, of a plangent and decisive diction, and enjoys using it. But hesitancy in action is a different matter. Noble minds have been infected by it; the true captains of men never. With one's critical circumstance in his life, it explains why Morley, the best of the Liberals, their only orator, and after Gladstone the one man fitted to impart dignity and moral and intellectual worth to their creed, and to preserve its priceless tradition of morality in the national life, failed at the Liberal succession.—H. W. Massingham in the "Fortnightly Review."

Daudet. Daudet, like Dickens, was a born giver. His first public reading was in aid of a children's hospital; his chief regret, when asked by his terrible illness, that he could no longer visit, as a toy-laden godfather, those for whom the "Spirit of delight comes on small wings."—Rowland Grey in the "Fortnightly Review."

Impressions in Germany. The attention of the foreign traveler in Germany is arrested by one outstanding fact, namely, the absence of the outward symbols of a Republic and the abundant presence of the outward symbols of a monarchy.—Professor Hermann Kantorowicz in the "Contemporary Review."

Rome. One might compare Rome to a prime old maiden lady of the ancient regime who considers that, as her mother and grandmother did very well without a bathroom in that wonderful apartment in the Quartier Noble, it would be a surrender to Modernism—not to say vandalism—to install one! Of Rome's dignity, charm, and lofty antecedents there is no need to speak, but judged from an English standard of public health, she leaves something to be desired!—Major Newman Craig, D.S.O., in the "National Review."

The Colour of Things. It is noteworthy that merry-go-rounds and ice-cream carts have kindred schemes of colouring, though they are not by any means so uniform as canal boats.—Edmund Vale in "Blackwood's Magazine."

The Romanian Child. Children are adored in Romania, and the childless home is rare, while adoptions are common. Perhaps the most vital reason for the anxiety to have a child in the home, is that there should be someone to take on responsibility to the rituals performed for the benefit of the soul after death. If a couple have no child to "shut their eyes" when the moment of death comes, then they adopt one, or take it "for the soul," as the saying goes. The child is then known as a "sufflet," or "little soul."—R. C. Davies in "Chamber's Journal."—John O'London's Weekly.

Robin Hood of India

SUCCESS IN FIGHT WITH STATE POLICE.

MADRAS.—Jumbalingam, a notorious bandit known for many years as the Robin Hood of India, has been shot dead with his lieutenant Kasi, in an affray with the Tinnevely police.

The death of this leader, marking the end of a long campaign on the part of the police, was the result of a sudden night raid. Constables surrounded the house in which Jumbalingam and other dacoits were sleeping. The inmates of the house made a spirited defense, killing the Indian police officer in charge of the party and wounding several others, but were soon overpowered by forces of numbers and were shot down.

Operating in the hilly tract between the Tinnevely district and Travancore State, Jumbalingam and his robber band became widely celebrated for their innumerable exploits and their sensational escapes from the police, even after arrest. The bandits made their home in almost inaccessible mountain places, and from these points of vantage made frequent raids into the plains. Disguised as holy men or innocent beggars, they frequented the country roads and relieved travelers of whatever valuables they possessed.

On one occasion when Jumbalingam and a number of his confederates were confined in the Central Jail at Palamcottah, he, by some means yet a mystery, obtained keys to all the cells where his men were confined, and enabled the whole party to escape, unnoticed by any of the guards or warders set over them.

At another time the police captured the bandits by the aid of an ex-convict who, on promise of a reward, joined Jumbalingam's gang and, at a suitable opportunity, betrayed it to the police party. As Jumbalingam and his fellows were being led to jail, in charge of an armed guard, they succeeded not only in escaping but in stripping the guards of their uniforms and taking their carbines and ammunition.

Jumbalingam perpetrated many of his recent robberies by impersonating a police officer charged with the special duty of capturing him. A heavy price had been offered for his head for several years.

Canada Expects a Flood

OF IMMIGRANTS NEXT YEAR.

WINNIPEG, Nov. 30.—Immigration into Western Canada next year will approach pre-war volume, it was forecasted by D. C. Coleman, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Western lines, here recently. Mr. Coleman, speaking in connection with the recently announced "open-door" immigration policy of the federal government, said: "The railway companies are strongly in favor of a vigorous policy of immigration. All indications lead us to believe that the movement into Western Canada next year will begin to approximate the pre-war volume."

"The temporary exodus of Canadians to the United States," stated Mr. Coleman, "was due to the fact that the application of very rigid restrictions on the number of immigrants admitted to the United States from Europe created a temporary shortage of labor in certain industries. There is evidence that the labor situation there will become normal within a few months and the movement from Canada will cease and will probably be followed by a flow of emigration in the opposite direction."
