didn't stop till it got to Tremont.

"How far is it to Tremont?" she said.

"Four miles," he said. She thanked him, and went away up the line. In a short time she ran back and took out her purse.

"Don't on any account say a word in the village or anywhere that I have been here, or a single breath about me—I'm ashamed ever to have come." He promised; she took out two sovereigns.

"Here it is," she said, handing them to him. "I'll pay you these." He got the book, took an oath upon it, received the money, and she left him. He was off duty at 5.30.

He has kept silence all through the intervening time until now, but lately the knowledge he possessed weighed heavily upon his conscience and weak mind. Yet the nearer came the wedding-day, the more he feared to tell. The actual marriage filled him with remorse. He says your sister's kindness afterwards was like a knife going through his heart. He thought he had ruined her.

"But whatever can be done. Why didn't he speak sooner?" cried Owen.

"He actually called at my house twice yesterday," the rector continued, "resolved, it seems, to unburden his mind. I was out both times—he left no message and, they say, he looked relieved that his object was accomplished. Then he says he resolved to come to me at the old house last night—started, reached the door, and dreaded to knock—and then went home again."

"Here will be a tale for the newsmongers of the county," said Owen bitterly. "The idea of his not opening his mouth sooner—the criminality of the thing!"

"Ah, that's the inconsistency of a weak nature. But now that it is put to us in this way, how much more probable it seems that she should have escaped than have been buried."

"You will, of course go straight to Mr. Manston, and ask him what it all means?" Edward interrupted.

"Of course I shall. Manston has no right to carry off my sister without his husband's hand," said Owen. "I shall go and separate them."

"Certainly you will," said the rector. "Where's the man?"

"In his cottage."

"Is no use going to him either. I must go at once and overtake them—lay the case before Manston, and ask them for an additional and certain proof of his first wife's death. An up-train passes soon, I think."

"Where have they gone to?" said Edward.

"To Paris—as far as Southampton this afternoon, to proceed to-morrow morning."

"Where in Southampton?"

"I really don't know. I only have their Paris address. But I shall find them by making a few inquiries."

The rector had in the meantime been taking out his pocket-book, and he lifted first page, whereon it was his custom every month to gum a small railway time-table out from the local newspaper.

FUN, FACTS AND FICTION.

Dark-haired persons have a better chance in the great struggle for existence than those of the opposite complexion, except in the city of London from $9 to $50. The City Council is asked, by petition, to pass a bylaw to that effect to its second reading, and then submit the question to the electors at the same time as the voting for mayor and aldermen early in January.

No one can doubt that the reduction of places of temptation where liquor is sold would be to the moral advantage of our fair city. We must think of our sons and remove all obstacles that might prevent them from realizing the high hopes with which our hearts surround them. Yes! and some of us have to tremble for the safety of brothers, or of others equally dear.

We are aware that women voters sometimes neglect, for various reasons, to cast their votes; but whatever might be said as to ordinary occasions, it seems to us that whenever a distinct moral issue such as this presents itself, our privilege of casting a vote becomes our duty. For, after all, what is the casting of a vote but a way of effectively expressing one's opinion? And surely none are more entitled to an opinion as to the number of places of temptation than the women themselves. They are other women's sons than women themselves—surely none have more suffered, directly or indirectly, because of the traffic in liquor, than our own.

You can aid us, those of you who are on the voters' list, by coming out and saying, by means of your vote at the coming election, that the proposed reduction of licenses shall take place. We lay this thought of your privilege and duty upon your hearts.

And to those women who are friendly to our views, but who are not electors, we ask you to help in influencing others to vote in the best interests of home and city, and of our beloved Canada.
