Rev. Thomas Dixon's Robin-Sheeting

Excursion Will Cost Him $600.

New York, Nov. 14.—A dispatch from Albany states that the Game and Fish Commission has considered the case of Rev. Thomas Dixon, jun., who was convicted recently of shooting robins and song-birds on Staten Island, and has directed the chief game protector to push the matter and collect the full penalty, $900, which the divine incurred by his recent excursion.

Mr. Dixon said that he would fight the case even to the Supreme Court.

RECIPROCITY.

Erastus Wiman Says a Treaty Can Be

Effectuated Between the United States and the Dominion.

New York, Nov. 14.—In the course of an interview Mr. Erastus Wiman said that the election of Mr. Cleveland is full of deep significance to Canada. He said that so far as food products are concerned, if Canada is willing to accept the tariff which is now in force, it will be unreasonable to expect that the tariff will be reduced to the Canadian products. Goods and reduced on American products. Goods and reduced on American products. Goods and reduced on American products.

Reciprocity will still be the change. Reciprocity will still be the change. Reciprocity will still be the change.

It is much more possible under a Democratic regime than under a Republican one. It is much more possible under a Democratic regime than under a Republican one. It is much more possible under a Democratic regime than under a Republican one.

Publican rule. The Republicans would withhold trade in the hope of compelling political union, unless forced by merchants and manufacturers to enlarge markets and free raw material. Publican rule. ought to go to it, for it is in trouble we find its comfort," murmured Mrs. Gould. "I have taught Richard to care for it a little. He did not when we married, and I think it is that which has kept him steadier than some."

The woman looked into the fire. The expression of her face seemed to say there was no comfort for her anywhere.

"That was kind of Mr. Danesbury, having the man before him yesterday," resumed Mrs. Gould.

"Did he have them? What for?"

"He had them all before him in the long room, and said it had come to his knowledge that their habit of frequenting the public-houses at night was growing much more common than it used to be. He told them that it ruined their energies, wasted their names, and brought discomfort on their thoughtful and to put a check upon their love for drink. He said he would undertake to keep from the public house, than that they should go on drinking worse and worse, as they were doing."

"They! Now look at Reed! He would not tell me, because he knew he should not take his advice. No more will any of 'em; they'll go to the public in spite of the master. Good-night, Mrs. Gould. I wish we were all in heaven together; 'twould be better for us."

Scarcely had Mrs. Reed left, when Richard Gould came in. Not quite gone—only half so. His wife put the supper before him without speaking; he did not eat it but went off to bed. The next morning he awoke, got up early and went out to get the shoes for the children; for it had become a custom for him to open for an hour or two in the morning. He had some of the necessities of the workingman's wife had ordered. His head was aching; his wife was relieved; his wages were sensibly diminished. He begged her to say nothing about it. He begged her to say nothing about it. He begged her to say nothing about it.

Harding's, and protested he never would be tempted out on a Saturday night again—had he had protested many and many times before.

Poor Mrs. Reed had gone into her comfortable home, shivering and miserable. Yet she did not dare to crack up the fire. Yet she did not dare to crack up the fire. Yet she did not dare to crack up the fire.
