"No sire," he answered, "not in the least; I only wink because your majesty winks, and I thought to please you by doing the same." "You have pleased me without knowing it," said the king to the astonishment of the courtiers, who stood aghast at the young man's presumption, "by curing me, him in everything, and you are certain to please him." Two enterpricing gentlemen, M. Menier, who seems to be a journalist, and M. Allemand, described as a banker, conceived some time ago the ingenius idea of turning the dry but fertile soil of the Sahara to profitable use. This was to be done by means of artesian wells and artifical oases. The capital to be subscribed was 400,000 francs, half of which was handed over to the founders in return for the idea and for lands which had been purchased from Arab chiefs. In order to stimulate the co-operation of capitalists two newspapers were founded, the France populaire, at Paris, and the Sahara, in Africa. The judical authorities had their attention called to this strange enterprise, and came to the conclusion that MM. Menier and Allemand were swindling the investors who had been inveigled into the business. Allemand at once took flight, and Menier, who was tried to-day, was condemned to two years' imprisonment and a fine of 500 francs. Allemand was ing condition at Union station yesterday morning, and was taken to the hospital. He is far gone in consumption. Having no money, he put in the night at the

To the queen goes the marquis immediately and informs her of his brother's wishes. The monarch, however, replied:
"Since heaven deprived me of my noble, ever lamented husband, I have made it an inflexible rule to take no step in the affairs of my house without first referring the matter to my brother-in law, the duke of Cobourg, I will write to him."

The queen did as she promised, but from the duke she received the following answer, instead of the consent she expected: "Your majesty, my beloved sis ter, is well aware that during the last four years important political changes have taken place in Germany, in consequence of which the centre of gravity has been shitted from Coburg to Berlin.
